THE PREFACE.

While we exercise a wholesome scepticism in testing the legendary miracles to which a simple people are apt to ascribe their conversion to a new religion, there is some danger in Scotland of losing sight of the main fact of the conversion of the Nation from heathenism to Christianity. Let it not be forgotten, that at a period anterior to record or chronicle, the tribes of various origin and language who then inhabited Scotland, were all brought from paganism within the pale of the Christian church. The means of their conversion are not even alluded to by the civil historian; but some traces of them may be found, faint indeed, and disfigured by credulity, in the old traditions of the Church, and in the rude memorials which the piety of their followers has left us, of the lives and actions of the apostles of the truth in Scotland. In rejecting, where separable, the fabulous portion of such materials, we must ever remember that there can be nothing in the most marvellous of legends more incredible than that the conversion of a Nation to Christianity should have been effected without any human agency.

An ancient life of Saint Columba informs us, that one of his Irish disciples, named Machar, received Episcopal ordination, and undertook to preach the Gospel in the northern parts of the Pictish kingdom. The legend adds, that Columba admonished him to found his church, when he should arrive upon the bank of a river, where it formed, by its windings, the figure of a Bishop's crosier. Obeying the injunctions of his master, Machar advanced northwards, preaching Christianity, until he found, at the mouth of the Don, the situation indicated by Saint Columba, and finally settled there his Christian colony, and founded the church which, from its situation, was called the Church of Aberdon.[1] The life of the apostle of the Scots from which we derive this information, of much higher antiquity than any history of civil affairs in Scotland, does not give the precise era of Saint Machar's foundation; but it may be conjectured to have been before the death of his master, which took place in the year 597. The venerable Breviary of Aberdeen gives, as the ancient tradition of the church, that the founder of the future cathedral was not interred there; but, having died in France on his return from a journey to Rome, he was buried in the church of Saint Martin of Tours.

Another adventurous band of missionaries of the same stock pushed still farther into the pagan fastnesses of the north, and established their little Christian family in the sequestered valley of the Fiddich, at Morthlac . Their colony must have thriven in the benevolence of the people, since, in the beginning of the twelfth century, the "Monastery of Morthlach" was possessed of five churches with their territories.

[2] Bull of Adrian IV., p. 5, confirming previous donations.

It was the fate of the ancient Columbite foundations in Scotland to fall before the reforming vehemence of David I., the most zealous of Romanists; who raised on the ruins of many a Culdee monastery, his magnificent establishments of Augustinian canons or Benedictines, or engrafted on their convents, the chapters of his new Episcopal dioceses. In this manner, the bishoprick of Aberdeen was founded by David, and endowed with several of the old Culdee possessions, among others, with the "Monastery of Morthlach," and its five churches.

The circumstantial account given by Fordun and Boece of the foundation of a bishop's See at Morthlach by Malcolm II. in 1010, must not be passed over. Whatever may be thought of the greater historical work of Boece, it is certain that he framed his history of the Bishops of the See of Morthlach and Aberdeen, from no other or fuller materials than those that have come down to us;[1] and this part of it rests upon certain charters which he quotes; upon a tradition of the church, which may be traced in its registers and its service books; and, lastly, upon the authority of Fordun, who wrote about the end of the fourteenth century.

It is necessary to clear the way, by disposing of five charters found in the oldest extant register of Aberdeen,[2] which would have been very important for settling this question, if they could be relied upon as genuine. Unfortunately, it is not so. The first charter printed in the following sheets, which was certainly meant to pass for one of Malcolm Canmor, has been very generally denounced as a palpable forgery; and it must be

[1] The charters quoted by him are all to be found in the extant registers; and some of the alterations of the record and dates superinduced on the margin, agree in so surprising a way with his book, that they give the impression of his own hand having made them.

[2] A. They are also copied literally in B.

admitted, that neither it, nor the following charter of David,[1] nor the three which profess to be of Malcolm IV.,[2] can be sustained as genuine, if their recorder set them down as perfect transcripts of the originals. It may not be altogether unreasonable to regard certain of these entries rather in the light of memorandums of actual grants, to which the scribe had stupidly affixed the conclusion and mode of testing and dating, that were in fashion in the charters of his own time. With regard to some of them, it is difficult to divine any object for which such writs could be forged. Others, however, contain subjects of great value to the church, and which it might be thought advantageous to place on a foundation so ancient as grants of David and his grandson. But even if some of these charters are to be viewed as constructed out of ancient memorials and put into a formal legal shape to serve a law purpose, or as true entries tampered with by an ignorant copyist, it is unsafe for an enquirer into the History of the Diocese to draw facts or dates from any of them.[3]

[2] P. 4, p. 7, p. 8.

[3] Of the objections against the admissibility of these five charters, some apply to all, others to individuals. With regard to the first charter, that which professes to be of Malcolm III., though ascribed by Boece to Malcolm II.; no other charters of Malcolm Canmor are extant, nor any genuine records or copies of such, nor have we any evidence that charters were written in his time, a fact which, while it entitles the defenders of the charter to decline the objections arising by comparison with other ancient charters, does not, on the whole, aid the presumption of its authenticity. It must strike any one, however, who has paid any attention to Scotch charters, that the style of this charter is comparatively modern. The address, omnibus probis hominibus suis tam clericis quam laicis salutem, is rather of the period of the Alexanders than of the very commencement of charter writing, if not, indeed, before its era. The formality of the "dedisse et hac carta mea confirmasse," also savours of a time when charter language had run into a mannerism that did not show itself for a century after the oldest of our ascertained writs. In puram et perpetuam elemosynam, though older in other countries, is a style of grant that does not seem to have been adopted in Scotland earlier than the reign of David I.

The second charter, which professes to be of David I., though less objectionable, is also somewhat too formal and technical in point of style. It may be observed, that although bearing to be granted in the 13th year of David's reign, no reference is made to the Bishop's translation from Morthlach, nor is the church and

It is proper to observe, that no other known charter, except the first of this series, makes mention of Morthlach as the seat of property of Morthlach named among the possessions of the bishoprick of Aberdeen enumerated in this general charter. On the whole, if it were not for the form of testing and dating, which will be noticed afterwards, this charter might pass for a genuine deed of the period, though it would not much aid the proof of the translation of the see of Mortlach to Aberdeen in the second year of King David I.

The third charter, that of Malcolm IV. to Bishop Edward affords more materials for testing its authenticity. It bears to be granted in the third year of Malcolm, or A.D. 1155, and to be witnessed by Edward the chancellor, and William the chamberlain. Now, Edward was chancellor under David I., and held the office till 1143-4, certainly not later; that is, he had ceased to be chancellor ten years before the beginning of Malcolm's reign, and no other chancellor of that name is to be found in the whole history of Scotland. There may be some doubt with regard to the earlier chancellors; but during the short reign of Malcolm IV., the only persons in that office were Walter, Ingelram, and Nicholas. This can be established by unquestioned documents. It would be curious if, on further enquiry, it should be proved that Edward the chancellor became afterwards the bishop of Aberdeen, and that the unhappy forger has actually lighted upon the person to whom the charter is granted for one of his two witnesses. Secondly, there can be no question that there was no High Chamberlain of the name of William during the reign of Malcolm IV., nor within half a century of his era. Even if we give the charter the benefit of 'William' being written from an initial W. perhaps instead of 'Walter', it may, indeed, indicate whom the writer intended to adduce, but does not at all support the genuineness of the document; for Walter de Berkley, the only person of a name beginning with that letter, if Chamberlain at all under Malcolm, only became so in the very last year of his reign.—(Crawfurd.)

The fourth of the series, which is the first charter of Malcolm to Bishop Matthew, (p. 7,) bearing to be granted in the eleventh year of his reign, adduces two witnesses, Edward the Chancellor, who has been already disposed of; and John the Chamberlain, with regard to whom, the scribe is not more fortunate. The first John who appears on the list of Chamberlains is John de Maxwell, in the reign of Alexander II., or more than half a century after the alleged date.

Further, this charter and the following, (p. 8,) both bear to be granted in the eleventh year of the reign of Malcolm, and are both granted to Matthew bishop of Aberdeen. Now, it will be shown that Edward was bishop during the whole reign of Malcolm, and did not die till 1171. These two charters, therefore, have such inherent defects as not to be cured by the mere cutting away of the date or testing clause.

But besides the particular observations applicable to each, some objections apply to all these five charters. They are dated and witnessed in a manner which was not usual in Scotland for half a century after the supposed date of the latest of them. It was not the custom, in the more early charters of Scotland, to insert any date by year; nor was the practice followed before the time of Alexander II. of marking in charters the regnal year of the sovereign. But here we have five charters professing high antiquity, each bearing date by year, in a mode of reckoning which, in all probability, was not known in the period to which some of them are assigned, and certainly was not generally used in charters, even at the time of the latest of them. The place of granting, again, does sometimes occur in ancient Scotch charters, but is much oftener wanting. Here, it is given in each of the five. In like manner, the day is seldom expressed in early charters, and, when expressed, it is generally distinguished as a festival of the church, or a day of a saint, marked in the calendar. But in a bishoprick : and no Bishop of Morthlach occurs as party or witness in ancient charter or chronicle.

each of these five charters, the day is expressed in the modern manner,—8th October, 30th June, 8th December, 20th August, 15th November,—a precision and uniformity at least very suspicious. Lastly, all charters in Scotland, from the introduction of that mode of conveying property or recording transactions, and for several centuries after the supposed period of the grant to Bishop Beyn, are corroborated by an array of witnesses, generally of considerable number. It is needless to point out how dangerous such ground must be for the constructer of a fictitious charter, and how anxious he must be to evade it. Nothing can prove it better than the fatal errors committed in the two charters of this series, where witnesses are adduced. Accordingly, the writer of these charters, concluded with such fulness and precision in other respects, has avoided an array of witnesses : but, in doing so, has adopted a mode of testing which it is very difficult to believe to be the mode used at any of the periods assigned to these writs, and altogether inadmissible as the form used over the whole long period between the earliest and the latest of them. Mabillon assures us that the attestation, Teste meipso, was introduced in royal writs only in the reign of Richard I. of England ; and we do not meet with it in Scotland in ascertained genuine charters earlier than the reign of Alexander II.

If these charters were otherwise free from suspicion, perhaps the Teste of the originals might be held to have been cut down by the registering scribe. Some remarkable instances of such a practice occur in our most authentic records. A more curious one cannot be mentioned than the charter of Richard I. restoring the liberties of Scotland to William; the original of which is extant, with a goodly array of witnesses, while the copy engrossed in the " Liber Niger" in the Register House, ends with Teste meipso. Boece was evidently aware of the flaw as regards these charters of Aberdeen ; and got over it in his own happy manner ;—Neque alium erogationis diplomatibus (chartas dicunt nostri) præter se inscripsit testem; tanta tum fides mortalium animos regebat! diplomata extant in rei fidem.

As it is possible the effect produced by considering all these five charters together, may be thought to press unduly upon the leading one, which should, perhaps, be viewed as standing alone, it may be allowed to subjoin the observations of the learned Ruddiman, its most zealous and able defender :—

" Sed de recepta apud Scotos Macbethi ætate diplomata scribendi consuetudine, eò minus nobis laborandum est, quod, ut haud parum antiquius, ita multo luculentius hujus rei indicium præbeat, si modo ipsius est, ejus avi Malcolumbi II. diploma, quo Murthilacum, in agro Banfiensi vicum, sedem constituit episcopalem, quæ postea Abredoniam erat translata. Hujus diplomatis exemplum habemus in chartulario quod dicitur Abredonensi satis vetere quod et in aliis antiquis collectionibus se vidisse ait cl. Dalrymplius ; (Collect. Histor. p. 135,) cujusque, utpote omnium (si vere Milcolumbi II. est) quæ mihi hactenus videre licuit, Scoticorum vetustissimi, apographum hic adjiciendum duxi.

Malcolmus rex Scottorum, etc.

Dixi, si vere hoc Milcolumbi II. diploma est, reuerendissimus enim ac in re antiquaria versatissimus Carleolensis episcopus, Gul. Nicolsonus hujus episcopatûs erectionem Milcolumbo III. disertè adscribit : quod adeo si verum est, hoc instrumentum Milcolumbi ejus III. non II., esse necesse est. Sed cum omnes ferè nostri scriptores (ut optime ratiocinatur Dalrymplius) constanter tradant, pio illi gratumque in Deum animum testanti instituto caussam dedisse nobilissimam totiusque belli decretoriam de Norvegis illo in loco à Malcolumbo II. reportatam victoriam ; ambigi vix potest, quin sub hoc rege episcopatus ille Murthlacensis, qui postea Abredonensis, initium ceperit. Huc adde quod in eodem libro Abredonensi expressis verbis dicatur : Tem-

The account of the establishment of the See of Morthlach by Fordun is very circumstantial:—"Anno regni Malcolmi [Secundi] pore Malcolmi regis Scocie filii Kenach, per eum Malcolmum constituta est primo sedes episcopalis apud Morthlach, &c. Kennethi autem (ejus nominis III. ac ultimi, Scotorum regis) filium, non Milcolumbum III. sed. II. fuisse, omnes nostræ historiæ testantur. Diffitendum quidem non est, alio ejusdem libri loco id factum dici anno 1070. At hoc ex librarii lapsu esse 1070 pro 1010 scribentis inde colligit D. Dalrymplius quod annus 1010 in annum sextum quadret regni Milcolumbi II. quo diploma hoc datum scribitur; at annus 1070 non in sextum, sed decimum tertium Milcolumbi III. incidat: ut proinde, si annus Christi sexto Milcolumbi III. anno respondens sit notandus, 1063, non 1070 scriptum oportuerit. Alias opinionis suæ à cl. viro allatas rationes, utpote minoris momenti, omitto. Id solum adjicio, sedis hujus episcopalis à Davide nostro I. ad Abredoniam translationem, amplisque privilegijs et redditibus locupletationem caussam videri, cur parva ipsius ad Murthilacum initia minùs accurate a scriptoribus nostris tradantur.

Duo tamen (ne quid dissimulem) in hac re mihi se injiciunt scrupuli. Primum, quod ante hujus sedis ad Abredoniam translationem tres tantum memorentur episcopi, Beyn, sive Beanus (sub quo in supradicto diplomate fundata perhibetur) Donertius et Cormachus. Neque enim verisimile quibusdam videri potest, ut tres continua serie episcopi tot annos ecclesiæ Murthlacensi præfuerint, quot ab anno sexto Milcolumbi II. ad initia Davidis I. h. e. ab anno M.X. ad M.C.XXV. numerantur. Hoc quippe pacto unumquemque annos fere xxxviij sedem illam tenuisse oportere: quod de viris, qui non nisi ætate provectiores ad id munus admoveri solent, haud facile creditu est. Sed huic difficultati non uno modo occurri potest. Primò enim dicere licet, a precedentis episcopi obitu ad subsequentis electionem aliquot annos (quod illis temporibus haud infrequens erat) intercedere potuisse. Deinde Nectanus, qui quartus ejus sedis episcopus numeratur, cujusque tempore hæc ad Abredoniam facta translatio traditur, complures dici potest annos Murthilaci, antequam Abredoniam migraret, sedisse. Tertio denique, neutiquam a naturæ legibus abhorrere existimandum est, viros summa in rebus omnibus continentia, quales eo ævo episcopi erant, tot annos quot in predicta serie supputantur, alios post alios vitam prorogasse. Certe Hector Boethius, qui peculiari libro vitas episcoporum Aberdonensium perscripsit, nihil fide absonum, aut communi rerum humanarum sorti contrarium se tradere opinabatur, cum Beano xxxi., Donertio xlii., ac Cormacho denique xxxviii., in sede Murthlacensi annos tribueret. Hi autem numeri simul juncti annos conficiunt cxi. i. e. ab anno M.X. ad annum fere M.C.XXII. pertingunt, quo anno Nectanus in episcopum Murthlacensem suffectus, ac postea, sede à Davide I. mutata, anno M.C.XXXVI. Abredoniam deductus, ab eodem Boethio perhibetur.

Sed aliud, multoque quam prius illud validius adversus hanc Milcolumbi II. chartam argumentum suggeritur, ex vocibus quæ sub finem sunt TESTE MEIPSO. Hanc enim formulam a Ricardo I. Anglorum rege primum invectam, ac ad posteriores reges deinde derivatam, notat cl. Mabillonius, qui porro addit eam Angliæ regibus peculiarem fuisse, ac non nisi in rebus levioribus, et quæ presentem executionem postulabant, adhibitam. Unde et quædam regum Francorum diplomata, ex eo præcipue capite quod hâc formulâ claudantur, suspecta ait videri. Grave quidem, fateor, ex hoc tanti viri testimonio adversus hujus diplomatis fidem nascitur præjudicium. At illud, cum ex eo genere sit, quæ vulgo negativæ probationes appellantur, prorsus invictum nemo existimaverit. Tot certè tamque variæ variis seculis inoleverunt exoleveruntque loquendi scribendique formulæ et consuetudines, ut quid quoque seculo receptum vel contra fuerit, vix alio pacto, quam comparatione cum aliis septimo, de multimodis sibi collatis a Deo beneficiis continue recolens, quid illi retribueret mente sollicita revolvit. Spiritus Sancti tandem operante gratia, divinum augere cultum corde concipiens, novam episcopalem constituit sedem apud Murthillach, non procul a loco quo, superatis Norvagensibus, victoriam obtinuit, ecclesiis ac prædiorum redditibus plurimis prædotatam. Hujus autem diœcesim sive territorium, ab amne sive fluvio qui dicitur Dee, transversum protendens usque flumen de Spey dirigi voluit. Ad hanc sedem primus episcopus vir sanctus et episcopatu dignus, cui nomen Beyn, ad regis instantiam a domino Papa Benedicto VIII., promotus est."[1]

Now, not to mention that the assertion of a person writing about 1400, and quoting no authority, is very insufficient evidence of facts dated in 1011, the account of Fordun will be seen to be essentially built upon the tradition of the Church of Aberdeen, which, however, he has falsified or mistaken, by substituting Malcolm II. for Malcolm III. of the episcopal registers.

At a somewhat earlier period than the era of Fordun, was engrossed in the Album Registrum, the most ancient of the existing records of the bishoprick of Aberdeen, the following commencement of a Table of its contents.[2] It has been much injured by ejusdem seculi scriptis facta, definiri possit. At cum nulla jam apud nos existent, præter unum illud de quo ambigimus, Milcolumbi ævo conscripta diplomata, haud satis justum rationique consentaneum videtur, ex moribus posteriore ætate usitatis de iis que præcesserant judicium ferre, adeòque de instrumentorum tam diversis temporibus scriptorum sinceritate statuere. Accedit et illud observatu dignum, haudquaquam verisimile esse, ut Scoti in diplomatibus confingendis, relicta trita illa et in omnibus quas viderant patriarum chartarum exemplis obviâ scribendi consuetudine, insolentem nullique præterquam Anglorum genti, si Mabillonio fides, usitatam formulam adhiberent. Sed neque Anglorum regibus adeò peculiaris erat hæc formula, ut non Scoti eam interdum usurpaverint. Ex Rymeri enim actis publicis apparet Alexandrum nostrum II. et III. itemque Joannem Balliolum, eâdem nonnunquam in literis suis usos fuisse. Sed nos totam hanc rem aliorum in antiquorum monumentis magis versatorum judicio relinquentes, ad alia pergamus."—Introd. ad Dipl. Scot.

The references in this table are all to charters recorded in this register which have been already described. They are only mentioned at present to show, that the writer of the record, although he mistakes the father of Malcolm III., whom he calls Kenneth instead of Duncan, is, in other respects, consistent with himself, and with the ascertained chronology. He ascribes the marriage of Malcolm and Margaret to the year 1070, which is the date assigned by the Chronicle of Melros[1] to the nuptials of Malcolm Canmor and Margaret of England. Nor can there be any doubt, that it is Malcolm III. of whom he speaks, notwithstanding his mistaken patronymic, when he mentions David I. as his son, and Malcolm IV. as his great-grandson, and bestows upon him his well-known appellation of Canmor.

[1] Lord Hailes, quoting the Chronicle of Melros from the only printed copy of his time, says, that, according to it, "at p. 158, the nuptials of Margaret were solemnized in 1067, but, ac-

According, then, to this,[1] the oldest authority for the tradition, and entitled to the more weight that it was written within the walls of the cathedral, a bishop's See was founded at Morthlach in 1063, which corresponds with the sixth year of the reign of Malcolm Canmor.

Another record, not, indeed, of so high antiquity or authority, asserts the translation of the See of Morthlach to Aberdeen, to have taken place in 1125.[2]

It is hardly necessary to observe, that these dates are more consistent with the number of bishops between the foundation of the See and its translation to Aberdeen, as preserved by the unvarying tradition of the Church, than the period assigned by Fordun and Boece, which would extend the incumbency of three bishops over a period of no less than 112 years.

Of the length of each episcopate of the bishops of Morthlach, we have, in fact, no authentic information. All the authorities agree as to their order. In the words of the oldest record,

The first bishop in that see was called Beyn.

The second bishop was called Donercius.

cording to the same history at p. 160, in 1070." From Mr. Stevenson's edition of the Chronicle of Melros, we learn that the date of 1067 occurs only in an old interpolation ; the record itself, if the venerable chronicle may be so called, places the marriage in 1070.

[1] Agreeing with this, and carrying down the tradition to a later date, is a memorandum which appears to have been entered upon a blank leaf, and in a hand half a century later than the table copied above. It stands on leaf 38, v., facing the beginning of that table ; and is printed at the foot of page 250 of the first volume, under the title "de terris ville dominii de Murthlach."

[2] Vol. II., p. 247.

The third bishop was called Cormauch.

Nectan is the name of the fourth bishop, in whose time, according to the tradition of the Church, the See was translated to Aberdeen by King David I., an event which took place, according to the manuscript of Bishop Gawan,[1] already cited, in 1125. If that date be correct, Nectan must have sat as bishop for an unusually long period, unless we suppose, that the name of a bishop who succeeded him, may have dropped from the list.

When, at length, we stand upon the firm ground of authentic record, we find the Bishoprick established, and Edward Bishop of Aberdeen in 1150,[3] and, seven years later, holding the property which had formerly belonged to the Church of Morthlach, including the "town and monastery "of Morthlach itself.[4] In the year 1160, or 1161, he was attending the king's court at Perth,[5] and he died in 1171.[6]

It may be conjectured, that this was the same Edward who was previously Chancellor under King David.[7] The bull of Adrian granted him the power of instituting "monachos sive canonicos in cathedrali ecclefia," perhaps in place of the old Culdees, now out of favour, and the writer of Bishop Gawan's Epistolare,[8] as well as Boece, states, that he first did institute canons, and formed the secular Chapter of the Church of Aberdeen.[1]

The next bishop was Matthew,[2] previously Archdeacon of St. Andrews, who appears to have been the brother of Odo, successively marischal and steward to Arnold, Bishop of St. Andrews, and whose descendents took the territorial surname of De Kininmond.[3] Matthew was elected in 1172, and consecrated on the 2d April of the same year.[4] As bishop elect, and before his consecration, he witnessed a charter of William the Lion, for enforcing the payment of tithes to the Church of Moray, to which Ingelram, Bishop of Glasgow, is also a witness, who died in 1174;[5] and after his confirmation, he was witness to a charter of

[1] The copy, in B, of the spurious charter of Malcolm to Bishop Edward, has the following rubric :—

[2] Bishop Keith in his history of this See, introduces after Edward, a Bishop Galfrid, apparently on no other authority than a bull of Adrian IV., printed by Bishop Nicolson in the Appendix to his Historical Library. It is addressed to the several bishops of Scotland, designated by the initial letters of their names, and among the number, one which Nicolson has printed, G. Appredunensi.

This bull, one of a series of late copies contained in the Cotton MS. Cleop. c. iv., stands in bad company, and is itself a very questionable document. The reading, however, which has misled Keith is a mere mistake of Nicolson or his copyist. The Cotton MS. gives not G. but E. Appredunensi.

[4] 1172. Matheus, archidiaconus Sancti Andree, ad episcopatum de Aberden est electus. Et postea 4to Nonarum Aprilis, scilicet in passione Domini, consecratus. Chron. de Mailr. Fordun repeats the words of the Chronicle, viii 16. The learned editor of the Bannatyne edition of the Chronicle of Melros seems to be mistaken in supposing that there is an error in the concordance of these dates.

In opposition to this authority, which is in accordance with the records cited, Boece has ventured to give 1163 as the year of Matthew's accession. His words are : "Haud multo post, Mattheus S. Andree archidiaconus Aberdonensem pontificatum est adeptus Malcolmi regis anno undecimo et Christiane originis 1163," pointing very distinctly at the two questionable charters of Malcolm in the Register (printed p. 7 and 8,) both dated anno regni undecimo. Keith, too, says, "There is a charter by King Malcolm IV., in the eleventh year of his reign, to Matthew, bishop of Aberdeen, which certainly must have been at lowest about anno 1164."

There is no other authority but the two charters now mentioned, for the existence of a Bishop Matthew in the reign of Malcolm IV. and it would seem that these charters, with their manifest objections, cannot stand in direct opposition to the authority of the Chronicle of Melros.

the same king, granted at Montrose to Simon, Bishop of Moray before 1178.[1] In 1178, he occurs as witness to a confirmation, by Bishop Hugh of St. Andrews, to the Priory.[2] Before 1180, he witnessed a charter of Malcolm, Earl of Fife, granted to the monks of Dunfermline;[3] and he assisted at the consecration of John, Bishop of St. Andrews, in the memorable council held at Holyrood in that year.[4]

From the number of transactions at which he was present at St. Andrews and in Fife,[6] he appears, as bishop, to have kept up the connection which originated in his parentage and his early office in the Church. He must have lived almost to the end of the century, and, according to Bishop Gawan's Epistolare, died in August 1199.[7]

John, Prior of Kelso, the successor of Bishop Matthew, was elect, and not yet consecrated, in 1199-1200.[8] As Bishop con-

Adam was the next bishop, whose surname was probably De Carail or Crail.[5] He confirmed the grants of Morgund Earl of Mar, of the churches of Tarland and Migvy, of Thomas Ostiarius, of Alford, and that of William de Lamberton, of the church of Bourtie, to the canons of St. Andrews.[6] He died in 1228.[7]

Matthew Scot the chancellor was elected as his successor; but resigned without having been confirmed. He had also been elected to the See of Dunkeld; but died before he was confirmed in either bishoprick.[8]

Gilbert de Stirling, the next bishop, was elected and confirmed, apparently in the year 1228.[9] He was witness to a charter of Alexander II., 9th October, the eighteenth year of his reign, to Neffus the King's leech.[10] He confirmed the churches of Tarland, Migvy, and Bourtie, to the canons of St. Andrews; the church of Kege, and that of Kindrocht, (or Castleton of Braemar,) granted by Duncan, Earl of Mar, to the Culdees of Monymusk.[11] In 1236, he was party to a litigation and settlement with the Bishop of Moray, regarding their respective diocesan rights in the churches of Auchendor and Invercullen.[1] Boece records his recovering from the wicked Highlanders—improbos quosdam montanos—the woodlands of Birss and Clova. He died in the year 1239.[2]

He was succeeded by Ralph de Lambley, previously Abbot of Arbroath, vir magnæ honestatis, says Fordun.[3] Boece says he was chosen for merit,—tantum ea tempestate desiderium (quod nobis videre minime est concessum) pastoris qui optimus esset habendi, mortalium animos incesserat,—and relates that he carried with him the asceticism of the convent into the Episcopal palace, and even made his visitations of his diocese on foot. It is curious to find, even in the days of Boece, such a distinction drawn between Episcopal luxury and the discipline and manners of the Lord Abbot of the great mitred abbey of Arbroath. In 1240, August 20, Bishop Ralph granted the common churches of the chapter an exemption from procurations and other Episcopal dues.[4] On the 23d October, of the same year, he was at St. Andrews.[5] In 1242 he affixed his seal to a composition between the Prior of St. Andrews and the Earl of Mar, regarding the churches of Tarland and Migvy;[6] and the same year obtained a royal grant of free forestry in Birss and Fettirneir.[7] At the desire of Sir William Byset, and to free him of suspicion of guilt, he excommunicated those who had partaken of the murder of the Earl of Athol at Hadington in 1242.

On the 24th April 1243, the chapter ratified his confirmation of grants by his predecessors, Matthew, Adam, and Gilbert, to the Priory of St. Andrews. The ratification is subscribed by the bishop as a canon, and by eight other canons.[1] On the 28th April 1244, he confirmed the church of Bourdin to the priory of Saint Andrews, in his cathedral church of Aberdeen.[2] He died in 1247.[3]

His successor was Peter de Ramsay, vir nobili ortus prosapia et clara ornatus scientia, says Fordun,[4] who informs us that he obtained a Papal rescript for fixing the stipend of the incumbent of each vicarage in his bishoprick at fifteen merks; which the Abbots of Arbroath and Lindores, great holders of benefices in the diocese, with the sanction of a provincial council, afterwards procured to be recalled. He was one of the bishops who presented to the Sovereign the remonstrance of the clergy against a new and hitherto unheard of interference by the civil Courts with Church property, contrary to a declaration of the King and Magnates in a council held at Edinburgh, the proceedings of which were not reduced to writing.[5] In 1255 he was appointed one of the young King's councillors in the settlement of the government made at Roxburgh, under the direction of Henry of England.[6] In 1256, with consent of his chapter, under the authority of a bull of Innocent IV., he enacted a body of statutes for the government of his church, professing to ratify the ordinances and constitutions of his predecessors, Edward, Gilbert, and Ralph.[7] He died the same year.[8]

[8] Chron. Mailr:—"M.cc.lvi. . . . Obiit Petrus Episcopus de Aberden." Fordun places his death in 1257, whom Boece follows.

The next bishop was an Englishman, whom Fordun, however, carefully notes to have taken the oath of fealty before obtaining the Bishoprick. His name is variously written, Richard de Potton, or de Pottocht ;[1] but the period of his succession and his true name are ascertained from a royal precept, in which the bishop is styled at full length, Ricardus Poiton, dated the 10th of May 1256.[2] On the 1st of August 1259, he concluded a composition with the convent of Lundores regarding the lands of Threpland.[3] In 1260 he had a brieve for ascertaining by different inquests what 'hospicia' and 'hostilagia' of right belonged to the Bishop, in royal burghs and manors.[4] In 1266, being the ninth year of his pontificate, the Bishop, after inspection of the statutes of the Church, with the consent of the Dean and Chapter, declared the church of St. Mary and the church of St. Machar to be one church cathedral, baptismal and parochial, all the revenues of which should be at the disposal of the Dean and Chapter for the support of the Church ; and the Bishop granted for the same purpose the churches of Dunmeth and Cloueth, of which he was the patron. Bishop Richard died in 1270.[5]

The successor of Richard was Hugh de Benham.[6] In February 1272, he gave his advice and consent to the erection of the hospital of Turreff in Buchan.[7] Along with many of the other Scotch bishops, he assisted at the Council of Lyons in 1274.[8] He is said to have presided in a provincial council assembled at Perth, for the settlement of disputes regarding small tithes.[1] In the year 1275, arrived in Scotland the legate Baiamund, whose name has been handed down in connexion with the earliest extant taxation of Scotch benefices. The legate assembled a council at Perth, at which probably the bishop of Aberdeen assisted. In 1276, on the 6th of February, the chapter confirmed his grant of Kylalchmond to William de Tatenell.[2] On Friday, 30th April 1281, a Justiciary Court was held in presence of Hugh, bishop of Aberdeen, and Sir Alexander Cumyn, Earl of Buchan, justiciar, for decision of a dispute regarding the marches of Nig.[3] He appears to have died a violent death at Loch Goule, one of the episcopal residences, in the year 1282.[4]

Henry le Chen was the next bishop. The date of his election is not known. He is first met with in connexion with the great family whose name he bore. On the 18th October 1285, Reginald le Chen, elder, granted the lands of Ardlogy and Leuchendy to the house of Ardlogy, a cell of Arbroath, which he had founded; and, at the same time, Bishop Henry united the vicarage of Fyvie to Ardlogy, in proprios usus of the monks: the cure to be served by a perpetual chaplain, "qui parochiam die noctuque cum necesse fuerit circumeat ac parochianis sacramenta ecclesiastica ministret."[5] He was one of the prelates who attended the Parliament at Briggeham, March 17, 1289.[1] About the year 1294, he granted the lands of Glak to Adam de Pilmure.[2] On the 23d February 1295, his seal was attached to the treaty between John Baliol and the French King.[3] In 1291, he swore fealty to Edward at Berwick upon Tweed, and did homage again in 1296, at Aberdeen, and afterwards at Berwick.[4] He was one of Edward's guardians of the sheriffdom of Aberdeen in 1297, along with Gartnay, Earl of Mar.[5] In Lent 1299, "dominus Henricus le Chen, Episcopus Aberdonensis," was present in a Court of Justiciary, held by Sir John Cumyn Earl of Buchan, Justiciar of Scotland, beside the Castle of Aberdeen, "in loco qui dicitur Castelsyd."[6] On Tuesday, after the feast of St. Bartholomew, of that year, he was at Fettirneir, where he confirmed a grant to Patrick de Rothnek.[7] On the 24th February 1309, he was present at the great meeting of the clergy of Scotland at Dundee, where they issued their declaration in favour of Robert King of Scots, "cum quo fidelis populus regni, vivere vult, et mori." On the 29th October 1312, he attested the treaty concluded at Inverness between Bruce and the ambassadors of the King of Norway.[8] On the 7th April 1313, he witnessed a grant made by the King to the Abbey of Scone, at Inchetor.[9] In 1314, he founded the chaplainry of Alveth.[10] Boece says that this bishop was a nephew of John Cumyn, and that he fled to England with others of their faction when fortune declared for Bruce. The facts mentioned above, showing the part he took in public affairs, as well as in administering the property of the bishoprick, during the most troubled part of Bruce's struggle, would rather seem to contradict that account; but leave us at the same time unable to explain the offence against the Sovereign, that could require the formal restitution to the royal favour granted to the Bishop in Parliament, on the 18th December 1318.[1] In August 1322, Henry, Bishop of Aberdeen, was arbiter between Arbroath and the vicar of Tarvays, in a dispute concerning a pension of eight merks, payable by the vicar to the Abbey, ratione vicarie.[2] In 1327, as it would appear, the bishop endowed a prebend in his cathedral, from the fruits of the vicarage of Ellon, in Buchan.[3] The Church Register records the death of Bishop Henry le Chen in 1328.[4] Boece says he died in the following year, 1329, "qui annus erat Roberto regi vitæ ultimus." The imaginative historian wished to establish a sympathy, even in death, between the Bishop and his royal benefactor.

II. p. 126,) describing the manner of his death, uses the words "qui suffocatus fuit in lacu de Goile," which has furnished to Boece an opportunity of inventing the story of the bishop dying by suffocation in a fit of cough;—in insula lacus de Gowllis, ubi vicinorum nemorum amœnitate delectatus senex sese continebat, catarrho exundante, subito interiit.

Alexander de Kyninmund was the next bishop. He attended the Parliament of David, held at Perth on 29th March 1330.[5] We have few notices of his pontificate in the church records. Boece tells us that he was a distinguished scholar, and courted the acquaintance of all those eminent for ecclesiastical learning; desirous to reform the manners of his people, he preached and exercised his episcopal jurisdiction through all parts of his diocese; and that he might do so more effectually, he commenced building episcopal residences at Morthlach, Aberdeen, Fettirneir, and Rayne, with the intention of dividing his time among them. Those of Aberdeen and Fettirneir he completed. Bishop Alexander occurs in public transactions from 1333 to 1335; in which latter year, he was one of the envoys to treat of peace with England, under the mediation of the Pope and the French king.[1] He died, according to the Church Register, on the 14th August 1340.[2]

William de Deyn succeeded. Boece states that he applied himself to complete the buildings begun by his predecessor, and to restore those destroyed by the English.[3] A greater labour for the new bishop was to reform the manners of his clergy run wild through the long civil war — 'silvescentem clerum bellico tumultu.' On the 16th March 1341, he had a safe conduct, along with others commissioned to go into England to treat for peace.[4] In the records of the church we find him chiefly busied in rendering effectual his much disputed right of second tithes. In 1345, he endowed with a salary of ten merks, a vicar for the parish of Old Aberdeen; proceeding upon the ancient common law of the Church and the constitution of the Scotican Council, which required "quod quælibet ecclesia parochialis proprium rectorem habeat seu vicarium perpetuum in loco residentem."[5] In his time is recorded a very curious specimen of old process, when William de St. Michael was summoned to the Bishop's Court, to answer for his forcible withholding of the tenement of Bishop Brennes. The Court was held at the STANDING STONES of Rayne, in the Garioch, on the 2d May 1349. The bishop was there, in plena curia, and there was present the King's justiciar be-north Forth, to lend the weight of the secular arm.[6] Bishop William de Deyn died on the 20th August 1350.[1] We may admit upon Boece's testimony, that he was buried in the choir of the cathedral.

He arrived on Sunday night, and devoted the two following days to superintending the complete burning of the towns of New and Old Aberdeen, and the country round, "so that it was burnt," says a contemporary, "without the omission of a single house, although in all Scotland were no handsomer houses."—Nova de Scotia apud Ferrerii histor. de Kynlos.

John Rait, "sacrarum literarum professor," was his successor. Of his short pontificate little is recorded. On the 20th June 1351, he confirmed the church of Fordyce to the chapter, as a common church.[2] He died in 1355.[3]

His successor, Alexander de Kyninmund, second of that name, was bishop here on 12th July 1356; for on that day he was a party along with the Earl of Mar, the patron, to the erection of the vicarage of Invernochty, into a prebend and canonry of the cathedral.[4] On the 26th September 1357, he and the other Scotch bishops, in a council held at Edinburgh, with consent of their chapters, bound themselves for payment of 100,000 merks, part of the King's ransom.[5] In the end of the year 1359, the bull of Adrian IV., the ancient foundation of the rights of the See, was exhibited and approved as genuine, in a provincial council held at Aberdeen.[6] Other writs were at the same time authenticated, but no mention is made of the charter of David I., the terms of which are so express regarding the disputed claims. On the 12th April of the following year, the King, in Parliament, ratified the bishop's right to the second tithes of the shires of Aberdeen and Banff, after examination of certain papal and royal privileges granted to the See, and other evidence, from which it appeared the Bishops of Aberdeen were from time immemorial in the use of receiving them.[7] In 1361, Thomas, Earl of Mar, the patron, prayed the bishop to unite the church of Auchindor to the prebend of Invernochty.[8] In the year 1362, on the 14th of September, King David II. was at Aberdeen, and there granted to the bishop and chapter his park of Galchull, in Banff, for supporting a chaplain to officiate in the cathedral for the souls of the King and his ancestors; and in the same year, the King at the forest of Kintor, gave a grant of free forestry of the park, with the ancient amercement against trespassers, of six cows.[1] The lands were immediately acquired by Alexander Abercrumby in feu-ferme.[2] In the year 1362, the chapter acquired the churches of Philorth, Logy Buchan, and Kildrummy, as common churches, the first two from the Crown, the last by gift of the Earl of Mar; which gave rise to some very minute and interesting regulations by the bishop for the discharge of the cures.[3] With consent of the chapter, he united the common churches of Cloveth and Kildrummy in the same year.[4] On the 26th April 1363, he had a safe conduct to go on pilgrimage to the shrine of Saint Thomas of Canterbury.[5] Bishop Alexander was the renovator of the cathedral, after the destructive war of half a century had reduced it to ruin. Primus templi hujus fundamenta jecit, says bishop Gawin's Epistolare.[6] A very interesting indenture of 20th June 1366, is recorded between him and his chapter, where, for the restoration of the Cathedral, the bishop resigns all the second tithes, with the revenues of St. Nicholas's Church, (except its fishing,) and the Chapter obliges itself to pay to the Master of Works the large sum of sixty pounds sterling, annually, for ten years.[7] In 1375, the bishop was abroad, and on the 26th July, he had a safe conduct, coming from parts beyond the seas into England and thence passing into Scotland, with 32 horsemen, and 10 persons on foot, in his company.[8] In 1376, the bishop endowed a canonry with the church of Tullynestyn.[1] In 1379-80, he obtained two bulls granting indulgences to all who should visit his cathedral in devotion, and contribute to the erection of its nave.[2] Bishop Alexander's name occurs for the last time in documents, as witness to a grant of wax to the church by William de Lask in 1380;[3] and the Church Record notes his death on the 29th July of that year.[4] He was buried, says Boece, before the high altar.

Adam de Tyninghame was the next bishop. He is known to have been previously a canon of St. Andrews.[5] He held the dignity of Dean of Aberdeen, when, in 1371, he was appointed one of four ambassadors to France.[6] He was still Dean in 1376;[7] and probably held that office till he was promoted to the bishoprick on the death of Alexander de Kyninmund. On 24th October 1381, as bishop, he held a court upon the mount of the Chapel of St. Thomas the Martyr, beside the cathedral, for the showing of charters of those claiming to hold lands of the church.[8] In 1382, the bishop is found vindicating his jurisdiction over the churches of the Abbey of Lindores, within his diocese; and calling in the secular arm to oppose the Mackintoshes, who had descended from their northern fastnesses, and taken possession, after their country manner, of the bishop's lands of Birse.[9] In the same year, on the last day of July, the bishop again held a pleine cour on St. Thomas's Mount, for exhibition of the rights of church vassals. The proceedings in that Court, and the discussions which arose upon them,[10] are among the most curious remnants of ancient Scotch law proceedings; and, from the fortune of our having preserved not only the process and notes of pleadings, but apparently the confidential suggestions of the bishop's counsel learned in the law, they are peculiarly instructive to the student of the Scotch feudalism of the fourteenth century. These were not the only proceedings of that year, destined to assist the student, feeling his way in legal history, five centuries afterwards. On a representation made by the bishop, that many of the Church muniments had been plundered during the late vacancy of the See, and the seals of others torn away; the King addressed a precept to the Chancellor, directing an examination of the King's Rolls, and the Compt Rolls of the sheriffdoms of Aberdeen and Banff, for documents making for the rights or liberties of the bishop and church; and on the 29th November the great seal was appended to a letter, engrossing in detail the result of that search.[1] Many of the records examined are still preserved; and are known to the scholar by a recent publication, invaluable to Scotch history, as the early Chamberlain Rolls of Scotland: but one extract is of more interest. It is from a rotulus rubeus qui intitulatur RENTALE DOMINI ALEXANDRI TERTII REGIS SCOTIE—a title that has become well known to the legal antiquary, in connexion with the learned discussion concerning the ancient valuations of land, by which the public burdens were formerly assessed, and which became in later times the measure of the Parliamentary franchise. A copy of the Crown rental itself, thus authenticated, in so far as was necessary for ascertaining the bishop's second tithes, is given in another part of these records.[2] On the 6th April 1388, bishop Adam granted liferent investitures to two Church vassals;[3] and these are the last transactions in which we find him engaged. He died in 1389.[4]

No more convenient opportunity may offer of explaining the nature of those "Second Tithes," which formed the fruitful subject of dispute between the bishops of Aberdeen and the men of their diocese, for centuries. Without founding on the questionable charters of David and Malcolm, the right of the bishops of Aberdeen to what came in later times to be called the "Second Tithes" of the sheriffdoms of Aberdeen and Banff, flowed undoubtedly from a very ancient royal grant, and may be held almost coeval with the establishment of the See at Aberdeen. Those dues are every where described as consisting of a tenth of the thanagia, reditus & firme, (or rents and dues payable by the thanes and the tenants of the King's demesne lands): a tenth of the casualties of superiority, (or the revenue levied from Crown vassals for ward, relief, marriage, and non-entry); and of the escheats, fines, and whole issues of the King's Courts—as well in burgh as to land, within that district.[1] The bishops of Brechin, the abbots of Dunfermling, and several other religious houses had right to dues of a similar nature, arising out of ancient royal grants, and not depending on the common law of tithes.

Gilbert de Grenlau, the next bishop, was previously a canon of Aberdeen.[2] He was bishop, and as such attended Parliament at Scone on the 18th of March 1390.[3] This bishop held the high office of Chancellor of the kingdom for a great period of his episcopate; not, however, uninterruptedly. On the last day of August 1394, he witnessed, as Chancellor, a charter to the monks of Melrose, granted in council at Edinburgh.[4] On the 11th October 1395, the bishop appeared in the King's Council at Stirling, in a complaint regarding the second tithes of Strathbolgie. The record bears that in that Council Master Duncan Petit was Chancellor,[1] Petit appears to have held the office of Chancellor of the kingdom during all that year, and we find him still so styled, the 26th of April 1396.[2]

On the 27th January 1398, the bishop was appointed by a Parliament held at Perth, one of the "council of wyse men and lele," who, in the absence of the "consail general were to assist the Duke of Rothesay in discharge of his duties as the "Kyngis lieutenande general."[3] Along with him were nominated the Bishops of St. Andrews and Glasgow, and perhaps to the influence of these ghostly counsellors may be attributed the strict orders given to the King's representative, "specially cursit men, hereticks, and put fra the kyrke, at the request of the kyrke, to restraygne."[4]

By the same Parliament he was appointed one of several who were "deputit with the Duc of Rothsay for til trete all thingis the quhilkis ar at Edynburgh to be tretit for the pece."[5] In these proceedings the bishop is not styled Chancellor, but on the 17th August 1399, he is amongst the official witnesses to a Crown charter as Chancellor of the kingdom.[6] He was Chancellor on the 24th November 1399;[7] on the 1st April 1400;[8] and on the 10th August 1402.[9] On the 4th May 1403, King Robert III. conveyed to the Chancellor, by charter under his privy seal, a silver cross, containing a portion of the real cross of St. Andrew the Apostle, a piece of Arras hanging, representing the offering of the Three Kings of Cologne, a linen cloth painted with beasts and birds, and a large breviary. These precious effects had belonged to Walter, late Bishop of St. Andrews, and at his death came into the King's possession "jure regio."[1] By Bishop Grenlau they were presented to the church.[2] On the 11th December 1406, the bishop, though still Chancellor of the kingdom, went on an embassy to England.[3] In 1412, the bishop, with consent of the patron, the Earl of Buchan, erected the parish church of Turreff into a prebend and canonry of the cathedral.[4] He attended the remarkable meeting of the three estates held at Perth on the 17th of March 1415, where he sought a solemn transumpt of the charters of Edward III., renouncing all claim to the superiority of Scotland.[5] On the 25th January 1419, he granted a charter of Parsi to Thomas Donaldson.[6] Bishop Gilbert de Grenlau, Chancellor of Scotland, died in 1422.[7] His anniversary, celebrated on the 20th September,[8] marks the day of his death.

Henry de Lichtoun was the succeeding bishop. His father was Henry de Lichtoun, and his mother's name was Jonet.[9] His first preferment in the church appears to have been in the cathedral of Moray, of which he was canon and chantor. In 1414, he assisted at a meeting of the chapter of Moray, held upon the decease of Bishop John de Innes, who had begun the restoration of the cathedral; where it was resolved that whichever of the canons succeeded him, should devote a third part of his revenue to the expense of building the cathedral, until its completion. The choice fell on the Chantor, and on the 8th March 1414, he was consecrated Bishop of Moray.[1] Henry, Bishop of Moray, was present in the meeting of the Estates at Perth, in March 1415.[2] While still bishop of Moray, he presented to the church of Aberdeen two pairs of episcopal gloves, with jewelled images of Saint James and Saint John.[3] The precise date of Bishop Henry's translation to the See of Aberdeen is uncertain. As bishop of Aberdeen he witnessed a charter on the 20th February 1423, founding a chaplainry at Saint Mary's altar, in the choir of the cathedral.[4] Bishop Lesly informs us, he was one of the Commissioners to England to arrange the ransom of King James I. After the King's return from his imprisonment, the bishop was one of those selected for an embassy to Rome,[5] from which he appears to have returned before the 20th June 1427, on which day, at the desire of the abbot and convent of Arbroath, he confirmed to their cell at Ardlogy, the vicarage of their church of Fyvie.[6] On the 28th October 1427, he converted the revenues of St. Peter's hospital, a foundation of Bishop Matthew, which he alleged to have been abused, to the maintenance of his episcopal table, and support of two chaplains in St. Peter's chapel, in the cathedral;[7] a questionable transaction, which was sanctioned by Pope Eugenius IV. in 1435. On the 17th July 1428, letters passed the great seal, appointing him one of three ambassadors to the French Court, for treating of the marriage of the infant Princess of Scotland with the Dauphin.[8] He was still in Scotland on the 7th

August[1] of that year, and seems to have returned from his embassy before the 9th October 1431, on which day he made a transaction at Aberdeen, for enlarging the episcopal palace or its grounds.[2] On the 20th April 1439, he founded an anniversary for himself,[3] and on the 16th May of the following year, made a similar endowment to the vicars of the choir for the anniversaries of his father and mother.[4] When now approaching his end, he is said to have been chosen, along with the Bishop of Moray, as mediators between the factions of the Chancellor Crichton and the Livingstons.[5] Bishop Henry died on the 14th December 1440.[6] He made, during his episcopate, several donations to the church, of books, vestments, and plate. He founded the chapel of St. John, in which he was afterwards buried. He completed the walls of the cathedral and the two western towers; leaving the third—probably the great centre tower—unfinished at his death.[7]

On Friday, 11th January 1440, the See of Aberdeen being vacant, the chapter convened and enacted a very curious code of statutes, having reference especially to the future bishop, and the independence of the canons.[8] Among the canons present was Ingelram de Lyndesay, prebendary of Methlak, upon whom, eventually, fell the choice of the electors. He was not, however, elected immediately; for the See was still vacant on the 27th July 1441.[9] Little is known of Ingelram previously. He appears to have been one of the chaplains and acolytes of Pope Eugenius IV., and in that [9] This is proved by a charter printed at p. 330, which has been misplaced. It seems almost certain it is of the 5th year of James II., or 1441. The See could not be vacant in the 5th year of any other King James.

character, on the 10th May 1434, had letters of safe conduct, proceeding from Scotland through England to Calais, on his way to the general council then sitting at Basle.[1] He witnessed, as bishop of Aberdeen, a charter dated at Aberdeen the 22d April 1444.[2] On the 27th April 1446, "an reverend fader in Christ and Lord, Sir Ingerame, be the grace of God, bischop of Aberdone," was party in a trial of marches with St. Peter's hospital of Old Aberdeen.[3] On December 1, 1448, Bishop Ingelram was present at a meeting of chapter, in which were enacted many statutes for regulation of the affairs of the cathedral, and chiefly for lightening the burdens of the canons, and the better administration of the common property.[4] On the 26th March 1451, the clergy and people of Aberdeen obtained a bull from Pope Nicholas V. granting a licence to prosecute the salmon-fishing on Sundays and festivals, during the five months in which those fish chiefly frequented the coast, on condition that the first salmon caught on each Sunday and festival, should be paid to the fabric of the parish church.[5] In 1454, Bishop Ingelram founded from the lands of Westhall in the Garioch, a chaplainry for the souls of King James II. and his Queen, the bishop himself, and David Lindsay, the second Earl of Crawford, of good memory.[6] On the 31st August 1456, he pronounced in favour of the dean and chapter's sole right to all the oblations and legacies bequeathed to the Church, although they had for some time been received by the bishop towards the support of the fabric of the cathedral.[7] Bishop Ingelram was a liberal benefactor to the Church. Many donations of his are recorded in the inventories of the cathedral treasury. He put a stone roof on the cathedral, and laid its pavement;[1] and added the churches of Rothwen and Monimusk to the number of prebends. He was still alive on the 2d of June 1458, when he gave collation to a chaplain of St. Anne's altar;[2] and Boece informs us he died the following year.[3] His anniversary was celebrated on the 24th August.[4]

Upon the vacancy occasioned by the death of Bishop Ingelram, Thomas Spens was postulated to the See of Aberdeen,—a personage so much mixed up with public affairs, that to give the details of his life would be to write the account of Scotch politics for the time. He had previously been, successively, archdeacon of Moray,[5] and bishop of Galloway, and had been much employed on foreign embassies. He was bishop of Aberdeen before the 16th April 1459, on which day he witnessed a charter of Mary of Gueldres, along with his successor in the See of Galloway, and George, Bishop of Brechin, the Chancellor.[6] In the same year the new bishop of Aberdeen was conservator of the privileges of the Scotch church, and presided at a provincial council on the 19th July. On the 4th November 1461, he had a safe conduct from Edward IV. to pass into England.[7] On the 3d February, in the same year, he inspected and confirmed all the donations and annexations of common churches made to the "mensa capitularis," or common fund of the chapter.[8]

On the 19th of March he again confirmed the privileges of the common churches, and granted to the canons and the inferior members of the choir, exemptions from mortuary dues, and from dues for confirmations of their testaments, and other privileges.[1] The bishop had the office of keeper of the Privy Seal from 1468 to 1471. His name occurs constantly in the sederunts of Parliament from 1464 to 1475, and in almost every sederunt of the Lords of Council, from 5th October 1478 to the 22d January 1479. In 1473, the bishop granted commission for erecting the chapel of Glenbuchat into a parish church, with baptismal font and other parochial privileges, separated from the parish of Logie Mar.[2] On the 22d January 1479, he took his seat for the last time among the Lords of Council, and gave decree in an action at the instance of Thomas Cochrane against Huchon Ros of Kilrawak, William thane of Cawdor, and others.[3] Bishop Spens died on the 14th of April 1480; and on the following day he was interred with much solemnity in the Trinity Church of Edinburgh, not far distant from the hospital of our Lady, which he himself had founded. The King, six bishops, and many of the nobility assisted at his funeral.[4]

The next who held the episcopal chair was Robert Blacader, who is found on the 5th June 1480, as prebendary of Cardross in the cathedral church of Glasgow.[5] On the 23d of the same month he sat among the Lords of Council as bishop elect of Aber-

The erection took place upon a narrative of the perils from storms and floods of the waters in passing between Glenbuchat and Logie, through an uninhabitable country and desert mountains, in which five or six people in one day, whilst going to keep the feast of Easter in the church at Logie, had perished. The bishop's commission was evidently dated in 1473, and the 13th year of his consecration, though by a mistake of the scribe it stands 1470, and the 23d of his consecration. The error is rectified by the date of the proceedings of the commissioners under the bishop's warrant.

deen.[1] Amongst those present in the Parliament which met at Edinburgh on the 2d of April 1481, is entered on the record "Robertus Episcopus Aberdonensis." By withdrawing the gift of his second tithes granted by his predecessor for repairing the church, he provoked the animosity of the burgesses of Aberdeen, which showed itself in one of those sturdy and somewhat factious resolutions, the natural effervescence of burgher confederacies.[2] On the 14th February 1483, Robert Bishop of Aberdeen sat in the Parliament, which that day met at Edinburgh.[3] Soon afterwards he was translated to the See of Glasgow, for in February 1484, we find him, as Bishop of Glasgow, prosecuting before the Lords of Council some burgesses of Aberdeen, and other inhabitants of his former diocese, for debts due to him before his translation.[4]

The person who succeeded to the episcopal chair, vacant by the translation of Robert Blacader, was William Elphinstone, the most distinguished of all who ever filled it. His life has been written by Boece, a contemporary,[5] whose manner it is to discard dates; and his character drawn without much rhetorical embellishment by Leslie, and by Spotiswood. We know him in the history of the time as the zealous churchman, the learned lawyer, the wise statesman; one who never sacrificed his diocesan duties to mere secular cares, but knew how to make his political eminence serve the interests of his church; who, with manners and temperance in his own person, befitting the primitive ages of Christianity, threw around his cathedral and palace, the taste and splendour that may adorn religion; who found time amidst the cares of state, and the pressure of daily duties, to preserve the Christian antiquities of his diocese, and collect the memories of those old servants of the truth who had run a course similar to his own; to renovate his cathedral service, and to support and foster all good letters; while his economy of a slender revenue rendered it sufficient for the erection and support of sumptuous buildings, and the endowment of a famous University.

[1] Act. Dom. Con., p. 59. These dates seem to contradict the account given by Spotiswood, and repeated by Father Hay and Bishop Keith, that Robert Blacader was, at the time of Bishop Spens's decease, at Rome, and was by the provision of Pope Sixtus IV., made bishop, at whose hands also he received consecration.

[2] Ext. Burgh Rec. of Abdn., p. 411. It is to be noticed that the bishop who is entered in the books of Parliament on the 2d of April as Episcopus Aberdonensis, is designated in the proceeding of the Alderman and council of Aberdeen, as 'Robert elect affirmat of Aberden.' May it be that the bishop elect had taken the oaths to Government, and been admitted to the temporalities of the See, though still unconsecrated? It is possible he may have gone to Rome after this date, and there received consecration.

What seems here most requisite, is to endeavour to give some chronological precision from records or authentic documents to the events of Bishop Elphinstone's episcopate and his life. This 'famous and memorable person'[1] was born in 1437, at Glasgow, and trained up in the Pedagogie of that city, after which, he went abroad and studied the civil and canon law at Paris. On his return in 1471, he was made parson of Glasgow, and Official of the diocese, an office which he continued to hold in 1476.[2] He was next appointed Official of the archdeaconry of Lothian, then the most important judicial office, of purely civil jurisdiction, in Scotland; and on the 1st June 1478, 'Mr. William Elphinstone, Official of Lothian,' sat in Parliament, and was a member of the judicial committees.[3] He discharged the same duty in the Parliament which met on the 6th March 1478,[4] and again in that of the 4th October 1479. Soon afterwards, he was promoted to the bishoprick of Ross, and in the roll of the Parliament which met on the 18th March 1481, is found "electus confirmatus Rossensis;"[5] and he sat by the same title in a Parliament which met on the 2d December 1482. He sat as Bishop of Ross in the Parliaments of 1st March 1482, and 27th June 1483. On the 17th May 1484, Willelmus "electus confirmatus Rossensis" was one of the Lords Auditors of Complaints,[1] the last occasion on which he appears in Parliament as Bishop of Ross. On the 27th July 1484, William Elphinstone sat in Parliament as Bishop of Aberdeen,[2] and he sat constantly during that year as one of the Lords Auditors of Causes and Complaints, and a Lord of Council. On July the 7th, 1486, he had a safe conduct from Henry VII. to go on an embassy into England.[3] On the 21st February 1487, he was appointed Lord High Chancellor,[4] but, being of the King's party, he held the office only till his death, which took place in June following.[5] The Bishop of Aberdeen again sat in the Parliament of October 1488.[6] He was engaged in law business in January of that year, and July following.[7] On the 4th February 1489, he was in Parliament, and chosen as one of the Lords Auditors of Causes and Complaints. On the 4th February 1489, he occurs as witnessing a Crown charter.[8] In October 1490, he was one of the Lords of Council,[9] and he attended Parliament and took a share in the public business in April 1491.[10] On the 24th July 1491, he was present along with the King, at Glasgow, when Bishop Blacader made an engagement to the dean and chapter, to preserve their privileges, in the event of the See being made metropolitan.[11] On the 6th February 1491, he sat in Parliament at Edinburgh.[12] In the course of the following year he was made keeper of the Privy

Seal; for on the 5th December 1492, one of the Lords of Council at Aberdeen was "Willyame Bishop of Abirdene Previe Seill."[1] On the 31st May 1493, he attended Parliament at Edinburgh.[2] He is found acting as arbiter and in private business in October of that year,[3] and in May of the year following.[4] There is now a considerable interval during which we do not find the bishop either in Parliament, or taking part in the affairs recorded in our chartulary. It is probable that during some part of this time at least, he was abroad on foreign embassies. In the autumn of 1498 he was again at home, for on the 21st August 1498, he obtained a Crown charter, erecting Old Aberdeen into a City and University, and Burgh of Barony;[5] and that charter speaks of his having been employed on embassies to France, England, Burgundy, and Austria. He was in his diocese on the 24th September,[6] and he was still at Aberdeen on the 27th May and 9th June 1499.[7] There is again an interval, during which the bishop may have been absent from Scotland. He sat in Parliament at Edinburgh, and witnessed royal charters as keeper of the Privy Seal in March 1503, and on the 19th of that month he was appointed one of "the Lords that sall sit now apon the Session."[8] He again appears in Parliament in July, November, December, January, and February of the year 1505. On the 7th of May 1506, he presided at a chapter of his cathedral, where, for removing the many and continual difficulties and contentions among the canons "de et super distributione facultatis eorundem canonicorum," it was ordained that there should be in the choir for the future, twenty vicars in priest's orders, of laudable conversation and manners, "in cantu Gregoriano ad minus periti et docti"— who should make perpetual residence, and officiate at all hours—who should be admitted and instituted by the bishop and chapter, by placing a ring on their fingers—and who should not be removed or deprived during life, save for a cause requiring deprivation; that there should be also two deacons and two sub-deacons; two accolites, a sacristan, and twelve singing boys; and that all should be supported out of the facultas canonicorum, the vicars receiving each £10 a year at least besides the usual commons, and a respectable habit on admission; the sub-deacons £6, 13s. 4d., the accolites, £4; the boys, £2, 13s. 4d., and the sacristan, £10, to be paid quarterly.[1] To the same bishop, perhaps nearly of the same date, the church was indebted for the full enumeration of the duties of Sacristan, and of the fees payable to that office-bearer, contained in the very curious and interesting chapter entitled "constitutio de officio sacriste ecclesie Aberdonensis."[2] The year 1506 is the real era of the foundation of his university of Old Aberdeen, for which he had prepared the way by obtaining a papal bull of privileges in 1494, and a royal charter of confirmation in 1497. On the 29th November 1506, he witnessed royal charters at Edinburgh as Lord Privy Seal. On the 1st of April 1508, he empowered the rector of Turriff to grant the lands of the burgh in feu for the erection of houses, at six-pence a rood. On the 8th of May 1509, he was again at Edinburgh, and witnessing charters as keeper of the Privy Seal, while he no doubt superintended at the same time the printing of his Breviary, which issued from the press of Chapman of Edinburgh, in 1509-10, a great monument of his industry and zeal. Elphinstone lived to extreme old age, having survived the fatal field of Flodden one year, and dying on the 25th of October 1514. A record written only a few years later, informs us that he built the great tower of the cathedral, (Father Hay says it was a mark for sailors in those days,) and roofed it and the whole church with lead; that he furnished bells for the church, and laid the foundation of the bridge of Dee.[1] It is certain, that besides laying the foundation, he provided in some measure for the building of the bridge of Dee, which he did not live to finish.[2] Archbishop Spotiswood's words, it may be allowed to quote:—"Neither did he neglect to use his best means for the advancement of learning, having built a stately college in Aberdeen, which, for the beauty of the edifice and rich foundation, was one of the rarest monuments this kingdom had seen. The expense he bestowed, partly on that work, partly for providing materials for building of the bridge upon Dee, with the large alms he gave daily to the poor and religious of all sorts, (not to speak of the help and relief he made to others of his kindred,) exceeded almost all credit and belief: for he was ever observed to keep a good table, and had no benefices in commendam (which was then grown into a custom amongst churchmen;) yet upon the rents of his own bishoprick, he did both maintain his estate, and do all those great and magnificent works; and, dying, left in treasure ten thousand pounds in gold and silver, which he bequeathed to the college and the finishing of the bridge at Dee; that in him we may truly see how it is not the abundance of wordly goods, but the blessing of God that maketh rich.

"What time he could spare from the publick service, he spent

[2] A querulous scribe of one of our registers, perhaps connected with the university, while recording a commemoration of Bishop Elphinstone, endowed by his executors, ejaculates—"how much better to have applied these monies to the college, to which, along with the structure of the bridge of Dee, he bequeathed his whole goods, while sound in mind and body." in writing the history of his nation, and gathered in one volume all the antiquities that could be found thereof. The memories also of those holy men who lived in former times in this kingdom, he studied to preserve, committing to writing their worthy and memorable acts, and giving order that on solemn days the religious should read some part thereof in their common meetings. Never was he seen to be idle, but always in labour and striving how to benefit the public. Nor was there any man known to have been of more integrity of life and manners, sweet and pleasant conversation, of a cheerful countenance, and exceeding delightful. The constitution of his body was healthful and strong: old age, which to others is of itself a disease, wrought in him no alteration either of mind or body; for being eighty-three years old, his judgment in the weightiest matters of state was observed to be as quick, and his memory as ripe, as when he was in the middle of his youth.

"That which is supposed to have hastened his death, was the unfortunate death of the King at Flowden; for after the report of that loss, he was never perceived to laugh, nor willingly did he hear anything that sounded unto mirth or gladness; and, thereupon, had resolved to live the rest of his time obscure and retired; yet being called by the council to assist some great business which for the time was in hand, he sickened in his journey towards Edinburgh, and the sixth day after his coming thither, died most Christianly. His body embalmed, was carried afterwards to Aberdene, and entombed in his own college before the high altar."

It may be permitted further to relieve the tediousness of these chronological notes by the character of Elphinstone, drawn by the pen of Bishop Leslie.

"Gulielmus Elphinstonus Episcopus Aberdonensis ac secretioris sigilli custos, vir non solum propter pietatem ac pruden-tiam, sed etiam propter divinum quendam afflatum quo fuit concitatus, dignus qui Iacobo tertio regi, ac quarto ejus filio, principi plane divino, in intima consilia adhiberetur, e vita octavo Kalendas Novembris migravit. Hic quantopere cupiebat virtutis doctrinæque Christianæ fines proferre, toti posteritati factis pietatisque monumentis peregregiis testatum reliquit. Nullam unquam vocem ex ejus ore (postquam judicii maturitatem consecutus Deo sacrisque sese dicarat) manasse scribunt, quæ vel fuco illita, vel mendacii graviorisque turpitudinis macula infecta fuerat, cum semper verbo expromeret quæ divinæ cujusdam sapientiæ sale conspersa, vel homines in turpitudinem lapsos revocarent, vel virtutis jam viam terentes acrioribus stimulis ad pietatis studium incenderent. Mensa aliis exquisita, sibi autem pertenuis: nam cum multos undique nobiles ad se quotidie illexerit, quadraque lauta satis humaniter exceperit, sibi eam continentiæ legem indixit, ut in omnibus deliciis voluerit esse Tantalus. Legationes ad Francum Imperatoremque ita egit, ut apud illum eloquentiæ, qua fuit egregie perpolitus, apud hunc prudentiæ singularem lauream tulerit. Domi ea justitiæ sinceritatisque laude floruit, ut sive contentiones sopirentur, sive amicitiæ jungerentur, sive Reipublicæ detrimenta alioqui sarcirentur, omnes et plebeii et nobiles illius operam et consilium desiderarent: unde totius populi vocibus excitatus, universis regni Comitiis ac consiliis publice habitis, non solum interfuit, sed pene præfuit. In quorum uno Perthi (ut supra diximus) celebrato, luculentum signum dederat, sese ad honores divitiasque (quæ perexiguo tempore definita facile fluunt) cogitationes suas non adjecisse, sed his contemptis, in divinis cœlestibusque rebus mentem suam sedulo fixisse. Nam cum plena Comitia, libera consensione, illum Archiepiscopatu Sanctandreapolitano, lauto valde ac opimo, auxisset, is in Episcopatu Aberdonensi ita conquievit, ut nullis precibus, quo hoc abdicato, Archiepiscopatum assumeret, induci potuerit; non quod tanti honoris labores detrectaret, quos pro Ecclesia exhauserat gravissimos, sed ut mens ipsius candida illa quidem, omnique ambitionis vinculo soluta, in contemnendis honoribus, divitiisque conculcandis clarius elucesceret. Illius eruditionem intimam, ingenium acutum, judicium longe tersissimum quid commemorem? non enim omnes tanti viri laudes nostræ orationis terminis definire aut possumus aut volumus; id enim hoc tempore agimus, ut illius factis quibusdam breviter commemoratis reliqui alia perplurima tacitis conjecturis facile colligant. In quibus illud profecto erat ad ipsius gloriam perhonorificum, et ad nostram Rempublicam valde salutare, quod Iacobi Quarti liberalitate ac auxilio fretus, Academiæ (in qua cujusque generis literarum scholæ aperirentur) fundamentum in veteri Aberdonia jecerit; illudque tandem collegium bellissimum quidem ad extremum fastigium feliciter perductum, honesto patrimonio amplificarit; ex quo tanquam ex fonte, multi et patrum et nostra memoria præclari viri effluxerunt, qui totam Scotiam, vel Christi luce e superiori loco collustrarint, vel jurisprudentiæ institutis imbuti Rempublicam pacate justeque summa cum laude temperarint. Quanto studio Reipublicæ operam navabat inde clarissime diluxit quod morbo gravissimo afflictus, Edinburgum, rogatu nobilium, profectus est, eo consilio, ut eorum animos mutuis odiis flagrantes compesceret, benevolentiaque jungeret. Verum (ut sunt cogitationes hominum fallaces) morbus in itinere gravis eum afflixerat, ut morbi itinerisque labore penitus toto corpore debilitatus, cogeretur animam, quam patriæ Deoque multos jam annos concesserat, naturæ tandem Edinburgi persolvere."

Bishop Elphinstone's historical collections, of which Spotiswood speaks in somewhat too high terms, and which Boece calls the first specimen of Scotch history, are preserved in the Bodleian library. They are now known to be little more than chronicles or chronological notices taken from Fordun and his continuator, with some valuable copies of original papers.[1] In the Breviary of Aberdeen, so interesting as a specimen of the earliest Scotch printing, he has left an invaluable memorial of the rites of the ancient church. The part appropriated to the legends applicable to particular Saints' days, embodies much Scotch ecclesiastical history, mixed with some notices of civil affairs of remote antiquity, founded on ancient written memoirs of the planters of Christianity in Scotland, now for the most part lost; but enough of its materials remain, to establish the general faithfulness of the compilation.

Very little is recorded or known of the successor of Bishop Elphinstone. Spotiswood tells us,—" The Canons assembling according to their custom to elect a bishop in his place, the Earl of Huntly, a man of great power in the north, came upon them unexpected, desiring that Alexander Gordon, his cousin, then Chanter of Murray, might be chosen. The canons not daring refuse, did all give their consents. In the mean time, was one James Ogilvy presented thereto by the Duke of Albany; and at Rome, Robert Forman, Dean of Glasgow, took a provision thereof from Pope Leo the Tenth: yet both these did resign their titles afterwards at the Duke of Albany his persuasion; Ogilvy having received in recompence the Abbacy of Dryburgh; and Forman yielding, at the desire of Andrew Forman his brother, then Archbishop of St. Andrews, upon promise of the next place that should fall void. Thus, after some months delay, Gordon was received and consecrated bishop." Alexander Gordon is said by Bishop Keith to have been the third son of James Gordon of Haddo, and to have been at first rector of Fetteresso, in the Mearns. He held the rank of Dean of Moray when he was raised to the Bishoprick of Aberdeen.[1] Father Hay says, " he was a man of good learning, and of a grave disposition;" good phrases, which may suit any divine of whom nothing is known. Bishop Alexander was elect and unconfirmed on the 18th March 1515.[2] He died on the 30th of June 1518.[3]

[1] Bishop Elphinstone's historical collections are now in the Bodleian. Boece, speaking of Elphinstone, says, specimen antiquitatum Scoticarum primus nobis ostendit. Hist. Scot. lib. xi. The industrious T. Innes examined the book carefully, and has left notes of its contents, as collated with Fordun, from 1286 to 1400.

A considerable number of Elphinstone's MSS. are still in the Library of his own University at Aberdeen; but they seem to be entirely law notes and commentaries.

Gavin Dunbar succeeded, a prelate whose power in the state and zeal for his church would have secured him the highest panegyrics of the church historians, if he had followed less closely Bishop Elphinstone. He was the son of Sir Alexander Dunbar of Westfield, by his wife Elizabeth, daughter of Alexander Sutherland of Duffus. We are not informed of his first living in the church; but he is found Dean of his native diocese of Moray in 1487.[4] And he held that office, apparently alone, till after the 22d of August 1498.[5] On the 24th of May 1503, he was Dean of Moray, and also Clerk of Register and of Council,[6] and he bears the same titles on March 13th of the same year.[7] Between the latter date and 24th November 1506, he had left the Chapter of Moray, and had been installed as Archdeacon of St. Andrews, while he still held the office of Clerk of Register.[8] Among the Lords of Council at Edinburgh on the 5th of December 1506, is " Maister Gawan Dunbar, Archidañ of St. Androis, and Clerk

Registre,"[1] and he witnessed royal charters by the same style, on the 8th of May 1509,[2] and on the 8th day of January 1515.[3]

In the year 1519, Gawin de Dunbar, now Bishop of Aberdeen, ratified the statutes of William Elphinstone, touching the government of the choir.[4] On the 7th December of that year, he collated Thomas Hay, secretary to the Duke of Albany, to the prebend of Rothwan, on the presentation of the Archbishop of St. Andrews, patron, "hac vice et in turno suo."[5] He was again at Aberdeen in April, May, and June 1521,[6] and on the 7th of May 1523, he gave collation to a chaplain in the cathedral, on the presentation of the Lord Forbes.[7] He was present in the Parliament held at Edinburgh on the 14th of November 1524; and in that of 22d February, in which he was one of the Lords of the Articles.[8] For his adherence to the Regent Albany, he was imprisoned, along with the Chancellor Beaton, by the Queen Mother, in August of that year, and not liberated till October. In November, the Secret Council appointed by the Parliament, consisted of the Chancellor, the Bishop of Aberdeen, Arran, and Argyll, with the Queen Mother for chief. In January the bishops were, with Angus and the confederated lords, at St. Andrews, in defiance of the Court. In February they were again members of a council of Government, of which the Queen was the head. In that unhappy time, parties were not drawn together by any common principle of action. The leaders of the state, the passionate, fickle Queen, the profligate Albany, all their followers, and their opponents, acted from no motives higher than the narrowest views of selfish interest. It is unprofitable to follow our bishop through the daily fluctuations of the factions of that vitious age. In 1527 was compiled and written at Antwerp, under his direction and at his expense, the magnificent "Epistolare de tempore et de Sanctis," for the use of his cathedral, which is still preserved in the University that owed so much to his care.[1] In 1529, he purchased the lands of Quarelwood and Lidgat, near Elgin, and endowed from them two chaplainries in the cathedral church of Moray, for the souls of his father and mother. The provisions of the foundation are more than usually minute as to the duties and conduct of the chaplains,—"quod dicti duo capellani sint bonae conversationis, absque concubinis aut focariis, in cantu Gregoriano experti, et discantu mediocriter instructi et docti," with other provisions for their constant residence, and for enforcing the rules regarding their honest conversation.[2] On the 14th December 1529, Bishop Gawin granted to the burgh of Aberdeen, the lands of Ardlair, for the erection of a stone bridge across the Dee.[3] On the 24th April 1531, the Bishop appears for the last time in Parliament.[4] On the 9th of February 1531, he opposed the grant by the clergy, of a large yearly contribution for the support of the new College of Justice,[5] and he was appointed by the dissentients to prosecute an appeal to Rome against the tax; "but this, says Spotiswood, ceased on an accord made." Finally, on the 23d February 1531, Bishop Gawin—promulgating the truth that "the prelates of the church were not the masters of the patrimony of the cross, but its guardians and administrators"—founded and endowed his hospital for twelve poor folk and a governor, to be built on the outside of the cathedral cemetry.[1] He died on the 10th of March of that year.[2]

Father Hay, adding somewhat to Spotiswood, gives us a few further particulars of his life and character,—"Gawan Dunbar, Archdean of St. Andrews, and Master of the Rolls, a man of many excellent parts, was after Gordon elected bishop, he set himself to perfect all those works which Bishop Elphinston had begun and were not yet finished, especially the building of the bridge upon Dee, (a fair bridge of stone, with seven arches); he built the south quarter of the College, and the houses that were appointed for the prebendaries and professors of sciences in the College. He did perfite the two lesser steeples, ceiled the church, and built the south aisle about 1522. The executors of Bishop Elphinstone he called to an account, and made them render the moneys left by him in legacy; adding thereto his own liberality, wherewith he accomplished all these works. He founded likewise ane hospital for twelve poor men, and a preceptor to attend them; and all the time he lived bishop, which was thirteen years, whatsoever profit or commodity he made by the church he bestowed wholly upon the poor and public works, without applying a farthing to his own use or the inriching of his kinsmen . . . . He bestowed many rich and precious ornaments upon the Cathedral which remained there long after. He built a fair house for the small prebendaries called the chaplains. Other many commendable works were performed by this prelate, besides his just dealing towards the common wealth. He enjoyed the bishop-rick for the space of thirteen years, and got not the fruits thereof in vain."

The successor of Gawin Dunbar in the see of Aberdeen, was William Stewart, son of Sir Thomas Stewart of Minto.[1] He was born in Glasgow about the year 1479. His first benefice in the church was the parsonage of Lochmaben, which he held in July 1528,[2] soon after which he was installed among the prebendaries of Glasgow as Rector of Ayr. It is said that he was next preferred to the Deanery of Glasgow,[3] and that he sat in Parliament in 1528.[4] On the 2d October 1530, he was made Lord Treasurer of Scotland, and was provided to the provestry of Lincluden.[5] He sat as bishop elect of Aberdeen in Parliament on the 17th May 1532. On the 28th July 1533, he is recorded in Parliament as bishop confirmed. In March of that year, the Bishop, with Robert Reid, abbot of Kinloss, and others, went on an embassy to England. A contemporary chronicle notes their departure, "weill apparelit in all sortis, with nyne mulis in their caryage, and, hyngand at thame, bellis of silver overgilt with gold."[6] The same record of passing events informs us, that "Upoun the fyft day of August 1534, Williame Bischope of Aberdene, the Erle of Murray, and my Lord Erskene, raid as ambassatouris throw England to France, for marriage of the Duke of Wandomis dauchter to the Kingis grace."[7] The Bishop was one of the Lords of Articles in the Parliament which met at Edinburgh on the 7th June 1535. In 1536–7, he was at Aberdeen, where he completed the title of the vicars of the choir to their new mansion.[8]

On the 16th February 1537, he subscribed, along with his chapter, a body of constitutions regulating the admission to the canons' stalls.[1] On the 13th April 1540, the Bishop admitted four persons to act as notaries within his diocese, and declared none other lawful.[2] On the 15th May, along with his chapter, he enacted a very curious code of laws for the economy and regulation of the Cathedral service and its ministers.[3] On the 28th May, he was one of those who, with the Cardinal Beaton, sat in judgment in the Cathedral of St. Andrews upon Sir John Borthwick, accused of maintaining that the Pope had no greater authority than any other bishop; that indulgences and pardons granted by the Pope were of no force nor effect; that clerks may lawfully marry; that churchmen ought not to enjoy temporalities,—and other heresies.[4] On the 1st September 1543, and the 14th May 1544, he was at Aberdeen.[5] In 1544, the church books record how Bishop William, removing with his church jewels and ornaments from Aberdeen, to seek a place of greater safety during the English invasion, was set upon, a little beyond the Bridge of Don, by a certain James Forbes of Corsinda, with his followers, children of Satan, who robbed the Bishop of the whole treasure, which was only restored, imperfect and mutilated, upon payment of 600 merks of redemption money. The Bishop and Chapter actually agreed to grant to the robber, four ploughgates of land, in lieu of that sum.[6] Bishop Stewart granted a feu-charter at Aberdeen on the 8th April 1545.[7] He is said to have died in that month. Spotiswood says of Bishop William Stewart, he was "a man given to virtue, charitable to the poor, and ready to every good work. He built the Consistory House in Old Aberdeen, enlarged the territory of the College, and bestowed upon it a part of the rent it now possesseth. He built likewise the library, with two schools, and founded therein four chaplains. The office of the [Thesaurary] in the State, conferred upon him by the King, he discharged with great credit, and dying at Aberdeen in the month of April, in the year 1545, was buried in the Cathedral Church."[1]

The next bishop was William Gordon, fourth son of Alexander third Earl of Huntly, who was provided to the vacant church on the 17th of May 1546.[2] He, or a person of the same name, had been recommended to be coadjutor of the former bishop, a short time before he died.[3] On the 3d June 1546, we find "Wilyam postulat

The new Canon was bound to give two lectures in theology weekly, in the cathedral, and to preach once a month to the people; and once in every year to visit and preach in each of the common churches of the chapter.[5] Other signs of the times are to be found even in the feu-charters of the Church, into which the Bishop introduced the clause, obliging the feuar to defend the rites and liberties of Holy Church, and resist all heretics and impugners of the true faith. From this time forward, the Records of the Church are filled with feu-charters and long leases, one of the modes of dilapidation of Church property practised universally at that period. The bishop continued granting charters and assedations of church-lands at Aberdeen during the years 1550-1. On the 15th September 1552, he was at Paris, where he granted a lease to Alexander Leith, which is subscribed by himself, the dean, the archdeacon, and seven canons.[1] On the 13th December 1552, which he states to be the sixth year of his consecration, the bishop, being still at Paris,—"quia variis reipublicae et nostris arduis prepediti negotiis, et propter diversa impedimenta quare in singulis negotiis ad nostram jurisdictionem et Episcopatum Aberdonensem spectantibus et concernentibus commode et personaliter interesse non valemus"—gave commission to Robert, Bishop of Orkney, and James Gordon, Chancellor of Moray, to grant a charter, with consent of the chapter, in favour of John, Earl of Athole. The witnesses to that commission are, James Stewart, prior of St. Andrews, afterwards Regent, William Keith of Balmuir, Master John Watson, burgess of Aberdeen, John Davidson, vicar of Nigg, and Alexander Skeen, notary public.[2] The bishop was again in Scotland, and in Parliament on the 12th April 1554, when he joined in the bond and obligation in favour of Hamilton.[3] On the 14th December 1557, he subscribed, at Edinburgh, the commission of the ambassadors sent to France to treat of the marriage of the Queen with the Dauphin.[1] On the 28th May 1558, he was at Aberdeen.[2] On the 29th November, of the same year, he sat in Parliament, and was one of the Committee of Articles.[3] The storm was now fast approaching, and though Churchmen were unwilling to believe it so near or so serious, we find many proofs of their apprehensions, and occasionally an indication of the measures by which they themselves hoped to avert it. Of this nature, is a memorial of advice given by the Chapter to the Bishop at his request; on all accounts a very remarkable proceeding, the record of which it may be allowed to give entire.[4]

In more immediate preparation for the storm which already shook the Church to its foundations, Bishop Gordon, on the 7th July 1559, consigned to the care of the canons, a portion of the cathedral plate, jewels, and vestments, of which a curious inventory has been preserved by the care of Father Hay.[1]

On the 20th October 1565, Bishop William Gordon, with consent of the Chapter, granted a charter of the lands of North Spittal to Janet Knowles (perhaps the "gentlewoman" by whom he "was slandered") in life rent, and to George Gordon, John and William Gordons, Elizabeth, Margaret, and Martha Gordons, in fee.[2]

Bishop William Gordon sat in the Parliament which met at Edinburgh on the 16th April 1567.[3] Father Hay says, that the bishop's sentence of forfeiture was reduced by the Regent Morton

[1] It is subjoined to the Preface.

in 1572, but he does not state his authority. Bishop William Gordon died on the 6th August 1577. Spotiswood's character of him is short and plain. "This man, brought up in letters at Aberdeen, followed his studies a long time in Paris, and returning thence, was first parson of Clat, and afterwards promoved to the See. Some hopes he gave at first of a virtuous man, but afterwards turned a very epicure, spending all his time in drinking and whoring; he dilapidated the whole rents by feuing the lands, and converting the victual-duties in money, a great part whereof he wasted upon his base children, and the whores, their mothers; a man not worthy to be placed in this catalogue."[1]

"In his time," says Father Hay, "the glorious structure of the cathedrale, which had been near nine score of years in building, was defaced by a crew of sacrilegious church robers; for in 1560 the barons of Mernes, accompanied with some of the townsmen of Aberdeen, having demolished the Monasteries of the Black and Gray Friars, fell to rob the Cathedrale, which they spoiled of all its costly ornaments and jewels, and demolished the chancell; they shipped the lead, bells, and other utensils, intending to expose them to sale in Holland; but all this ill-gotten wealth sunk by the just judgment of God, not far from the Girdleness. The body of the Cathedral was preserved from utter ruine by the Earle of Huntly, and, in 1607, repaired and covered with slate at the charge of the parish, and so continues yet in pretty good order."

[1] It has not been thought necessary to notice a surmise of Father Hay and Bishop Russell, that there may have been two bishops in succession of the name of William Gordon. The change of conduct, even if that were proved, is but a slender foundation to build upon. It is impossible that any appointment of a Bishop should have taken place about 1567, the time fixed upon, without some record of it being preserved.

In preparing the preceding list and chronology of the Bishops of Aberdeen, it has not been thought necessary, on most occasions, to call attention to its differences from the previous accounts of Boece, Spotiswood, and Keith. It is perhaps proper to mention, however, that all these authorities were constantly in view, and that they are not followed, only where sufficient reasons appeared to warrant their rejection.

After the Reformation,[1] the Bishops of Aberdeen were the following:—

David Cunningham, 1577-1603.
Peter Blackburn,—1615.
Alexander Forbes,—1618.
Patrick Forbes of Corse, 24th March 1618 to 28th March 1635.
Adam Bellenden, 1635-1638.
David Mitchell, 1st June 1662-1663.
Alexander Burnet, 1663-1664.
Patrick Scougal, 13th April 1664 to 16th February 1682.
George Halyburton, 1682-1688.

The Registers and other Manuscripts from which the materials of these volumes have been drawn, are referred to in the Table of contents, as well as the notes to this Preface, by certain letters, under which they may now be described.

The larger of the two volumes of Aberdeen Register, which are preserved in the Advocates' Library, seems to have been anciently called the "Registrum Album."[1] It consists of 188 numbered leaves of vellum, written in many different hands, and at very different periods; but no part of it can be safely ascribed to an earlier date than the middle of the fourteenth century. Its arrangement is unmethodical. The part which has originally formed the beginning of the record, consists of bulls and charters in favour of the Knights Templars and Hospitallers, which are followed by the charter containing the constitution of the cathedral as fixed in 1256, a few ancient charters, and the well known "Statuta Generalia Ecclesie Scoticane."

In a hand, nearly of the same period, follows a list of bishops, and a few ancient charters, some of which are of questionable authority; and the margins are disfigured with clumsy attempts to fix their dates.

A miscellaneous collection of charters and instruments follows; and the curious rental of Alexander III., by which the second tithes of the bishop were collected, with lists of taxations of benefices, conclude the older section of the volume, consisting of 104 leaves, in which, however, there are many interpolations. From folio 105 to 128, consists of charters written about the beginning of the fifteenth century, and with these probably ended the old "Registrum Album." The subsequent leaves are of a more modern handwriting, and of inferior vellum.

[1] B. fol. 40.

The latest deed entered is a charter of assedation of the lands of Glassauch, granted by the bishop to Mr. Alexander Ogilvy. It is dated at Edinburgh on the 22d July 1535, and is engrossed on leaves 186-8.

B.

The smaller of the two volumes which are preserved in the Advocates' Library, consists of 89 leaves of vellum. The first 50 leaves, as well as from folio 80 to folio 86, are written uniformly in a square and legible hand, which is occasionally illuminated.

The volume was begun during the pontificate of Gawin Dunbar,[1] and it seems to have been intended to contain a digest of the constitutions of the Church and its privileges. A general indication of the sources from which these were copied, is afforded by the following note, from which we also learn by whom, and at whose expense this compilation was executed. It occurs on leaf 50. "Exemplate sunt hee constitutiones ex antiquioribus ecclesie Abbirdonensis registris magis approbatis per me fratrem Willelmum Scenam Carmelitanum Abbirdonensem jussu mandato et sumptibus venerabilis viri Magistri Alexandri Gallouae canonici Abbirdonensis." Alexander Galloway was Canon of Aberdeen and Prebendary of Kynkell from 1520 to 1550.

The rest of the volume consists of miscellaneous charters and instruments; in particular, concerning the foundation of the Hospital of St. Peter of Aberdeen, foundations of the perpetual vicarages at the presentation of Arbroath and Lindores, and "Limites terrarum," of which the rubric runs, "The marchis that ar decidit of ald of the kyrk and bisshopryik of Abberdein and diuers uthir lordis landis as the ald attenkik registaris

PROPORTIS AND BERIS VITNES IN THAIRSELF."[1] The Registers alluded to would seem to be, A, the "Registrum Album," and C, the "Registrum Rubeum."

The last articles in the book are the "Ordinacio Chori," "Privilegia capituli," and the charter of the office of bailiary of the bishoprick granted to George, Earl of Huntly.

C.

This volume, the property of King's College, and inscribed on the back, "Registrum Cath. Eccles. Aberdonensis," appears, from an entry in B., compared with one in this Register,[2] to have been the "Registrum Rubeum" of the cathedral scribes. It consists of 84 leaves of parchment, of a small folio size, and has been written by different hands, and probably, at one time, formed different fasciculi.

The first portion, consisting of inventories of books, jewels, and charters in the treasury, is distinct, and apparently written in 1436. It is followed by a series of statutes, the latest date of which is 1461. After a single charter of James III. 1469, follows another series of statutes of the church of Aberdeen, various bulls, and a few charters of the time of David II. and Robert II. This portion, which appears to be the most ancient of the volume, may be ascribed to the middle and latter part of the fourteenth century.

The remaining part of the volume is in several different hands; part of it of the middle of the fifteenth century, but the documents at the end written as late as the sixteenth century.

D.

A volume, the property of King's College, which is entitled in the handwriting of Mr. Ker, "Necrologia Ecclesie Cathedralis Aberdonensis," belonged formerly to the family of Lesley of Eden, and was presented by "George Lesley of Edden" to the library of King's College in 1727. It is a handsome quarto volume, of 80 numbered leaves of parchment, the greater part written in a uniform hand by the same scribe, probably about 1540-50. It is apparently in the original binding, and with the old studs, though it has been repaired and inscribed on the back with Mr. Ker's title already mentioned.

Before the commencement of the numbered leaves are placed 26 leaves, having for a general title, "Anniuersaria fundata in Ecclesia Cathedrali Aberdonensi." They are divided into months, and arranged like a calendar, but few of the intended entries have ever been made.[1]

The other contents of this Register consist mostly of foundations of anniversaries and obits, in the duties and emoluments of which the vicars of the choir were interested.

The last 12 leaves are in a more recent and more careless hand than the body of the book.

A small folio volume, the property of King's College, consisting of 213 numbered leaves of parchment, entitled "Registrum Capellanorum chori Ecclesie Cathedralis Aberdonensis." With the exception of an inventory of jewels and books, which occurs at folio 81-3, [1] These being arranged according to months, are printed at the foot of each monthly leaf of the Calendar, prefixed to the Second volume.

the volume contains nothing but charters and infeftments in favour of the vicars of the choir. None of these are of great antiquity. The first half of the volume is written in a uniform hand, with rubricated initial letters, and perhaps about the end of the fifteenth century. The latter half beginning at folio 97, is in different hands, and of somewhat later dates.

F.

A volume of an octavo size, of 46 leaves of parchment, inscribed on the back, "Inventarium Cath. Eccles. Aberdonensis 1549," the property of King's College. This is a neatly written little inventory of the jewels, plate, and vestments of the church, written, as it appears, by Mr. Alexander Galloway, at the instance of the chapter in 1549. It is still in the original binding, though badly patched.

G.

A folio volume, the property of King's College, inscribed on the back, "Registrum Assedationum Cath. Eccles. Aberdonensis," of 106 numbered pages of parchment, is written throughout in a hand of the sixteenth century. At the beginning are the constitutions and ordinances of the chapter, made in 1540, which end on page 8. The rest of the book contains assedations of church lands by the bishop and chapter, the latest of which is dated 28th May 1558.

H.

This handsome folio of 169 numbered leaves of parchment, is entitled "Epistolare de Tempore et de Sanctis ad Cathedralis Ecclesie Aberdonensis vsum ac consuetudinem per anni circulum," and bears an inscription, stating that it was written at Antwerp, by the orders of Bishop Gawin Dunbar in 1527. It is a lectionary containing lessons of the Old and New Testament, for the whole year, from Advent to Advent.

At the beginning is a list of the canons in their order, and a calendar, which is valuable from the number of Scotch saints. At the end is a list of the bishops; concluding with the donations of Gawin Dunbar to the church; after which, an annotator of no very extensive range of vision, has made the following note :—" Perpendant secum pii lectores cuiusmodi sunt hi apparatus ad ædificandum spirituale Christi regnum !"

The last article in the book is an account of the constitution and successive increase of the Chapter.

BISHOP'S RENTAL, 1511.

This is an original accompt of the bishop's rents in 1511, written on a roll of seven membranes of vellum, which was purchased lately at a London bookseller's sale. All that is known of its previous custody is, that it was in the hands of Mr. George Chalmers. It may have come to him, with other records and papers, from the Scots College. The roll is now in the Advocates' Library.

The arrangement of these materials was not unattended with difficulty; and it was found that scarcely any method could be adopted that would not be open to objections. The plan followed is at least sufficiently simple.

In the first volume are placed all charters, contracts, rentals, and documents of every description immediately concerning the foundation and endowment of the Cathedral of Aberdeen, or the property and revenue of the Bishop and Chapter. These materials are arranged in a general chronological order; but in a few instances the precise order of time has been interrupted, to allow documents to be placed in series, where they relate to the same subject and do not differ widely in date. The matter of the Registers prior in date to the beginning of the 15th century, has been given at length, without alteration of any kind, except discarding the abbreviations of the old scribes. From 1400 to 1500 the documents are generally given in an abridged form, preserving the words of the original, without changing the language, or adding any thing, but leaving out merely formal and technical clauses, and such as seemed unnecessary for the sense.[1] In the last period, extending from the beginning of the 16th century to the Reformation, deeds become both more numerous and much more prolix, while unfortunately they are less interesting. Greater liberty has been used in compressing the documents of this section, and each is in general merely described in a short title, using, as far as possible, the language of the original. Where, however, the deeds appeared somewhat more important or curious, the words of the originals have been given more at length, and in some instances, entire. The Rental of 1511, for example, is printed verbatim.

The contents of the second volume are of a more miscellaneous description.

At its commencement is placed the Calendar from Bishop Gawin's Epistolare, and in connexion with it, the ' anniversaries'

[1] The first document abridged in this manner is the charter of Udney, on p. 209. In every instance where words are omitted, the omission is indicated by three points . . .

or commemorations of individuals to be celebrated in each month, from the "Necrologia."[1]

The next article is the collected body of the canons of the Scotch Church, which have hitherto rested solely upon the authority of our Registrum Album, from which source they were given in Wilkins' great Collection of Concilia, and afterwards printed separately by Lord Hailes. For the date of these, and for their authority, it might be sufficient to refer to the learned lucubrations of Innes, in the former collection, and the opinion of Lord Hailes, who attributes the canons to provincial councils held at Perth in 1242 and 1269; as, although the evidence is imperfect, it is probable that a considerable part of these canons were sanctioned or ratified in councils of the Scotch clergy held about those times. There is reason to believe, however, that amongst them are to be found the vestiges of a much more ancient ecclesiastical law, part of which may be traced up to the time of David I., the great legislator of Scotland, as well as the remodeller of its Church. It is unnecessary to direct the student to Lord Hailes's edition of these canons, and his "Historical memorials concerning the provincial councils of the Scottish clergy." Something more might be done for illustrating this important chapter of Scotch history; and fresh materials have recently come to light, affording an additional inducement to the intelligent antiquary to study the ancient church law of Scotland.[2] In the meantime, it does not seem unsafe to conclude that this body of laws, like other codes, though perhaps sanctioned and re-enacted at one or more definite meetings of the enacting body, was in truth its collected legislation, springing up little by little, and receiving the stamp of usage or the authority of competent courts at intervals for several centuries; so that even if we could fix, more precisely than is perhaps now possible, the era and the council when the collected statutes were first sanctioned as a code, it would only prove the introduction of the several laws to be not later than that time.

[1] The calendar has a considerable number of Scotch Saints; but more are found in a martyrology secundum usum ecclesie Aberdonensis, which is preserved in the Edinburgh University Library. The Saints are there given in connexion with the churches dedicated to them, or places where they were held in special reverence. A list of these is subjoined in the Appendix to this Preface.

[2] At the end of a MS. collection of Scotch law in the Archbishop's library at Lambeth, of the beginning of the sixteenth century, is a chapter headed Statuta Ecclesiastica, a great part of which coincides with the Aberdeen Statuta generalia ecclesie, for which it furnishes many useful readings. But a part is altogether different, and even more important.

Next in order and in importance, stand the particular statutes of the Church of Aberdeen.[1] The tradition of the Church was, that Bishop Edward had exercised the power conferred upon him by the Bull of Adrian in appointing Canons and constituting a Chapter in his Cathedral. But the first record of a constitution is in the time of Bishop Peter de Ramsay, who, in 1256, fixed the composition of the Chapter, and provided for the Cathedral service, with an endowment of thirteen Canons, (the Bishop being one) and the whole subordinate officers of the choir.[2] This very curious code, defining the privileges and the duties of all the officers of the Cathedral, and descending even to the mode of living and the position of the manses of the Canons, vests the absolute patronage of the prebends in the Bishop, with the exception of the deanery alone. The Dean is to be chosen by common consent of all the Canons. Here, as elsewhere, the appointment of the Bishop himself is passed over without notice. The right was too well ascertained to require any declaration. It is only for modern times that it would have been of use, to have described the form of proceeding for filling a vacant see, used in Scotland in the thirteenth century.

[1] P. 38.

[2] There is a strong presumption of an earlier foundation of a Chapter at Aberdeen. A Chapter of eight Canons was constituted in the cathedral of Moray before 1220; and before 1245, a Chapter of ten Canons was endowed in the remote diocese of Caithness. Gilbert de Moravia, Bishop of Caithness, in his charter of constitution, states, that previous to his time, in that Cathedral, non esset nisi unicus sacerdos Deo ministrans, tum propter loci paupertatem tum propter frequentem hostilitatem. The charter is preserved at Dunrobin.

The taxations of the bishoprics of Scotland,[1] and of the churches and benefices of the diocese of Aberdeen,[2] are apparently parts of that great valuation of the benefices of the Scotch Church that took place about the year 1275, under the Papal collector, Baiamund, fragments of which, applicable to particular districts, are scattered through most of the Chartularies of Scotland. As generally the oldest materials of parochial history, these valuations, constructed for assessing in due proportion the taxes to be raised from the Clergy, whether for Rome or for domestic claims, are of considerable importance; and a complete collection and collation of such as are still preserved, would be a valuable contribution to Scotch antiquities. The "Procurations,"[3] or dues paid to the Bishop, in lieu of the ancient burden borne by the rural Clergy, of entertaining him and his suite during his visitations, have an interest of the same kind. These seem to have been put upon the footing which they finally maintained all over Scotland, by the legate, Cardinal Ottobon, or by the Council which assembled soon after his unsuccessful interference in Scotch affairs in 1268.

Of the statutes enacted by the Chapter during the episcopate of Alexander de Kynninmund, some have been already noticed in the chronological notes of that bishop. The rest have chiefly in view, the enforcing of residence of the Canons, and provisions for the decent performance of the cathedral service.[4]

[2] P. 52.
[3] P. 55.
[4] P. 57-62.

The statutes of the Chapter, during the vacancy of the See, after the death of Bishop Henry Lychton,[1] are an example of the efforts made by the Canons to secure their independence, which they thought might be better asserted whilst the future Bishop was as yet one of themselves.

The statutes and ordinances of Bishop Ingelram in 1448, are again chiefly for the internal policy of the Chapter, and the regulation of the members of the choir.[2]

No part of the collection will be regarded with greater interest by the Church antiquary, than the directions for the ritual of the choir, which, though not dated, may, without much hesitation, from their position, be ascribed to the pontificate of Bishop Ingelram.[3]

The constitutions of Bishop Elphinstone chiefly relate to financial arrangements, and the due proportion of the salaries of the Cathedral ministers; but the minute prescription of the duties of the Sacristan,[5] accidentally affords us the most lively representation that is anywhere to be found, of the actual appearance and arrangement of the edifice of the Cathedral.

The Statutes of the Bishops and Chapter end with those enacted by Bishop William Gordon, in 1540;[6] and it has been thought advisable to keep all this class of matter together, forming, as it does, by far the most perfect collection that has been preserved, of the laws and customs of any Scotch cathedral.

The short 'memoria,' giving the Church tradition concerning the foundation and translation of the Episcopal See,[7] has evidently been engrossed in the Registrum Album, in the time of Bishop Gilbert de Grenlau. The subsequent Bishops are entered on the margin of the Record in a later hand.

The successive inventories of books, plate, vestments, jewels, and furniture of the Cathedral and its treasury, come next in order, extending from 1436 to 1550.[1] It is unnecessary to direct attention towards this, probably the most generally attractive, part of the collection. But those who might require some commentary on it, will observe that these lists could only be illustrated by a commentary so minute as to be altogether inadmissible in a preliminary notice that has already extended to such length. The lists of books[2] have had their usual fate of being prepared by scribes, both ignorant and careless. But the successive lists, whether of books or of jewels, serve in many instances to explain each other.

The next class of matter consists of recorded Obits, Anniversaries, and small Foundations for pious purposes,[3] collected from several of our Registers, for which it is sufficient to refer to the Table of Contents.

Bishop Gawin's Epistolare, it has been mentioned, contains a few chapters directly bearing upon the history and constitution of the Cathedral and Chapter. Along with these, have been given short specimens of the lessons that form the body of the work.[4] The version of the Scriptures does not differ from the Vulgate more than is common in MS. church books of that period.

After a papal absolution of a party of Forbeses and their accomplices, for the slaughter of Martin Cowttis, a priest, in 1531,[5] the remainder of the text consists of documents which, though found in the Church Registers, have no immediate reference to the property of the Chapter, or the constitution of the Cathedral. The oldest and most interesting of these are the charters of the Templars and Hospitalers successively established at Aboyne and Mary-cultir, on the banks of the Dee. The settlement between the Bishop of St. Andrews and the Culdees of Monymusk, which took place about the year 1211,[1] illustrates the much-disputed constitution of those old Columbites, and incidentally evidences some ancient Church dues, the nature of which, and the very etymology of their names have been lost. The composition of the Templars, with their opposite neighbours, the Monks of Kelso, for the emancipation of their chapel at Mary-cultir, which encroached on the rights of the parish church of Cultir, the property of Kelso, is particularly important for the history of the district.[2] Among the other charters of this section will be noticed foundations of hospitals at Kincardine Onele by Alan Durward, and at Newburgh in Buchan by Alexander Comyn Earl of Buchan, in the middle of the thirteenth century; a foundation for the support of the causeway through the Cowie Month;[3] and the charter of erection of the city and burgh of barony of Old Aberdeen.[4] The two last documents, the letter of bailiary, which, although not dated, is plainly granted to George fourth Earl of Huntlie, about 1549;[5] and the foundations of a Mass and Anniversaries for the soul of Bishop Elphinston,[6] are placed here, from having been omitted in their proper order.

[1] P. 264. This deed is printed from A, collated with a much older copy in the Register of the Priory of St. Andrews. The dues alluded to are in both records designated spersis, ferdis, sauchbarian, thonneom thraumund, probably all of Gaelic etymology.

[2] P. 288.

[3] P. 286.

[4] P. 303.

[5] P. 306.

[6] P. 310.

The Appendix consists of three original documents, not engrossed in any of the Registers. Of these, the first is a good notarial copy of an ancient charter of Bishop Matthew granting at the presentation of the Hospitalers, induction in certain churches which the notary has written 'Clenmecuy;' showing how early the Knights of the Hospital obtained a footing in the Diocese. The next is the notable deed of Bishop William Gordon, admitting the preaching Canon, already mentioned. The lands of Fetterneir, bestowed on the Leslys of Balquhain for their good service in defence of the Cathedral in time of trouble, against the cruel persecution of the enemies of the Catholic faith, is the subject of the third. For the two last, the Club is indebted to the liberality of Bishop Kyle. The concluding article of the volume, is Bishop William Stewart's sanction and approval of four notaries for the Diocese, with a list of those admitted in conformity with his rule, for a considerable time afterwards.

A Table of the Contents is prefixed to each volume, in which the titles have been made to give somewhat more of description than is always afforded by the rubrics of the Record. The Table also serves to give the reference to the book or other authority from which each entry is printed; and the dates, where known or nearly ascertained, are added.

It will be found that the First Volume of these collected Registers throws light chiefly on the ancient territorial state of the Bishoprick, its lands, churches, and revenues; its relation to neighbouring proprietors; and the condition and progress of the people of the diocese; while the Second illustrates the church law of Scotland; the particular institutions of the diocese of Aberdeen; its Cathedral constitution and customs; its ritual, and church service and ceremonies; the interior of the choir, the treasury, and the chapter-house.

The First Volume is calculated to be oftenest referred to, and perhaps most practically useful. No one living within the bounds of the diocese can turn it over without finding something to interest him—something throwing light on his family, his property, or his parish—showing the ancient state and occupation of his own residence, or of conterminous property. It may require somewhat more reflection to appreciate the body of Church muniments in the Second Volume. But, rightly considered, the interest of mere local history is secondary to that of the Christian antiquities of our country. If it be possible to trace the introduction of Christianity in its first simplicity, the weak beginning of the Church when struggling for existence, its progressive acquisition of security, wealth, and power, it cannot be unprofitable to examine dispassionately the causes of its success, by what means it controlled the minds of men not easily led, and influenced their laws, banished all sectarianism even in thought, and brought it about that men gave to the Church in the full confidence that they were giving to God.

In that inquiry—in examining the foundations of that mighty power, wielded often for good, sometimes for evil—it may be allowed to lay aside for the time questions of doctrine. We may be permitted to view the ancient Church as an artist with a task proposed; to examine the materials in her power, and the skill with which she used them. We shall then find much to admire, something perhaps to imitate. We are astonished at her adaptation of herself to all circumstances, and patient bending of all things to her purpose. However politicians dispute, we cannot regard without sympathy, her care of the poor, and the ceaseless charity which she inculcated for the benefit of the giver as well as of the receiver. Not less worthy of our attention is her avowed and consistent principle of inspiring piety by an appeal to the imagination and the heart. Subservient to that end was the munificence directed—ad ampliandum cultum divinum—ad decorem domus Dei—to make more glorious the service and the fabric of the Church, not as a mere place of popular instruction, or a convenient meeting house for devotion, but regarded by the old Catholic, as by the Jews of old, as the temple and very shrine of a present Deity, where innumerable altars were offering up the ever renewed sacrifice of propitiation. The effect of such means for the object proposed—to produce strong faith, unhesitating obedience; the success of the great plan of the ancient Church, and its whole influence on society—are subjects of reflection not to be slighted by the most philosophical, nor rejected by those most opposed to the Roman Catholic doctrines, with the same ends in view. As some part of the materials for such an investigation, these collections of church usages, the relics of a once splendid hierarchy, may be held not unworthy of some study; and it is not too much to say, that their study, if entered upon without prejudice, would fill an instructive chapter of Scotch history.

Rationes date vicecomiti per eundem ·

Primo dicitur in rationibus quantum recolitur quod tres perſone debent eſſe in iudicio ſcilicet iudex actor et reus ſet dominus epiſcopus fuit iudex in propria cauſa et pars etiam igitur iudicium nullum · item ſecundo prolocutor ſuus qui fuit quaſi eadem perſona cum iudice nullam admittendo exceptionem legitimam vel plegium fecit dari ſententiam contra poſſeſſionem ſine decreto aſſeſſorum curie quod de iure fieri non debuit vt aſſeritur · item tertio quod fecit poſſeſſorem citari certo termino ad docendum quomodo tenuit et eodem termino ſine vlteriore dilatione licet ſepius petebatur fecit dari ſententiam ordine iuris non ſeruato et omni iuris defenſione legitima penitus repulſa igitur etc · item dicitur quod dedit quadraginta libras fabrice eccleſie igitur alienatio legitima quia confirmatio regis eſt ſuper hoc ſpecialiter ſubſecuta · de aliis non recolitur ·

Contra Willelmum de Camera opponitur ſic quod cum ipſe ſit vaſſalus eccleſie Aberdonenſis non debet contra eccleſiam nec in placito nec in conſilio ſtare · ymmo ipſam eccleſiam dominam ſuam contra filium et patrem tenetur iuuare vt in Libro feudorum · tit. Hic finitur lex et incipiunt Regni conſuetudines · § final. et De noua forma fidelitatis cap. vnico · cum ergo ipſe fecerit fidelitatem eccleſie Aberdonenſi petitur quod non admittatur contra ſuum iuramentum ſet ipſum a iudicio repellatis ne ipſius periurium videamini approbare · et quod hoc facere tenemini probatur per C. ij. De iureiurando · Libro ſexto · et offerimus nos facere vobis conſtare legittime de huiuſmodi iuramento fidelitatis preſtito eccleſie Aberdonenſi per ipſum · et ad hoc probandum petimus nos admitti et cum ſimus loci ordinarius monemus vos vicecomitem Aberdonenſem primo ſecundo et tertio et ſub pena excommunicationis quod hoc ius canonicum obſeruetis ·

Item pro parte domini epiſcopi Aberdonenſis proponitur quod

dictus Willelmus de Camera non potuit appellare ſic videlicet quod appellatio conſtringeret appellatum coram ſuperiore comparere · nam tempore appellationis per ipſum emiſſe idem dominus epiſcopus interrogauit ipſum quomodo ſua interfuit appellare et quam poteſtatem habuit appellandi · reſpondit appellans quod de ſua poteſtate nichil voluit ſibi oſtendere nec docere · cum igitur illi ſoli audiantur appellantes quorum intereſt et de intereſſe ipſius appellantis non conſtet nec ipſe docere voluit de poteſtate ymmo penitus renuit videtur quod iſta appellatio dominum epiſcopum non aſtrinxit in vim citationis legittime ad ſuperiorem curiam veniendi vel ibidem reſpondendi nam omne iudicium incipit ab ea parte que eſt de in ius vocando · Inſt. De pena temere litigantium · §. final. et in ius vocatio fieri non poteſt niſi per perſonam legittimam et legittime a principio fundatam et de cuius poteſtate conſtet · et cum iſte non ſit talis videtur quod dominus epiſcopus non tenetur comparere ·

Item falſificans iudicium debet inuenire plegium in manu vicecomitis vel mari ſui vel in manu domini cuius iudicium falſificatur vel mari ſui et debet dicere iudicium eſt malum et falſum datum contra me in tali loco et de tali cauſa · modo non conſtat de inuentione huiuſmodi plegij nec de forma verborum obſeruata ergo apellatio nulla quia contra ſtatuta et conſuetudines regni ·

Item dato quod talis appellans oſtendit nunc literam de attornato in forma communi capelle domini noſtri regis videtur quod non habeat mandatum de appellando quia forma mandati eſt diligenter obſeruanda · ff. Mandati · Diligenter · nam forma mandati non habet quod ipſe appellare poſſit ergo illud ſibi non licet quia fines mandati excederet · et ſi dicatur quod attornatus poteſt appellare etiam ſi ſibi expreſſe non mandetur vt in C. pl. De procurato · dicitur quod hoc verum eſt in placitis et querelis per ipſum pertractatis et ſic intelligitur in dicto C. in aliis autem extra illum caſum appellare non poteſt niſi ſibi ſpecialiter mandatur quia tunc actus appellandi eſt principalis et nulli alteri placito vel querele acceſſorius ·

Item contra pretenſam appellationem Willelmi de Camera pretendentis ſe attornatum Johannis Crab afferentis ſe tenentem eccleſie et epiſcopi Aberdonenſis de baronia de Murthill a iudicio in curia domini epiſcopi Aberdonenſis tenta apud montem capelle beati Thome martiris iuxta canoniam de Aberdon dato vltimo die menſis Julij anno Domini milleſimo trecenteſimo octogeſimo ſecundo contra Johannem Crab predictum ſuper ipſa baronia dicitur quod ipſa appellatio eſt nulla in ſe fruſtratoria et friuola manifeſte et cauſa diffugij facta nimis generalis et vaga debito tempore non interpoſita nec per eum qui appellare potuit et alias talis quod non eſt recipienda a iudice ſuperiore ſicut inferius latius dicetur ·

Item quod rationes pretenſe date de ipſa appellatione et alie facte ad ipſius iuſtificationem ſunt inualide et inefficaces que nec iuſtificant appellationem nec relevant appellantem ·

Item quia interpoſita eſt contra ius ſcriptum ſcilicet ne cauſa ſeodi in curia domini terminetur et ne fiat quod iuriſdictioni fieri debet ſeu quod edicto perpetuo continetur ſicut per rationes ſequentes clare patet ·

Ad rationes datas in appellatione et ad alias datas ad partem locumtenenti vicecomitis reſpondetur ſic · Ad primam quando dicitur quod Tres perſone etc · reſpondetur quod hic fuerunt tres perſone ſcilicet curia iudicans prolocutor domini proſequens et Johannes defendens et ſic ſufficienter fundatum iudicium · pro hoc facit C. Qualiter et quando · n · ibi non tanquam idem ſit actor et iudex ſed quaſi denunciante fama vel deferente clamore officij ſui debitum exequitur et tale iudicium eſt fundatum ex vniuerſali conſuetudine regni ·

Ad aliam quando dicitur quod Nullam infeodationem etc · reſpondetur quod cum ipſe ſit baro domini noſtri regis et iuriſdictionem ordinariam habeat ſicut ceteri barones regni ipſeque et predeceſſores ſui fuerint et ſint in poſſeſſione huiuſmodi curias tenendi et iuriſdictionem exercendi in huiuſmodi caſibus ſimilibus ipſe merito potuit in ſua curia iudicium dare ſecundum leges et conſuetudines regni iudicium enim huiuſmodi fundatum eſt generali et vniuerſali conſuetudine totius regni et fruſtra curias teneret ſi ius in eis dicere non poſſet · iſtud etiam iudicium firmatum eſt vtroque iure tam canonico quam ciuili vt ſcilicet quando controuerſia vertitur inter dominum et vaſſallum ſuper feodo vel tenemento quod in curia domini debet huiuſmodo queſtio terminari · pro hoc eſt caſus in auttentica De prohibita feudi alienatione per Fredericum · cap. ij. § Preterea · Coll. x. t. iij · C. Ceterum · De iudiciis · et C. Ex tranſmiſſa · et C. Verum · De Foro competenti ·

Ad tertiam quando dicitur quod Prolocutor domini fuit quaſi eadem perſona cum eo etc · non meretur habere reſponſum quum poteſt eſſe frater domini et quecunque alia perſona coniuncta ymmo ipſe dominus et quod dicit Sententiam fuiſſe latam ſine decreto aſſeſſorum curie · non eſt verum nam membra dicte curie legittime interrogata erant et ſecundum eorum reſponſa ſententia data fuit et quod dicit Nullam legittimam exceptionem admittendo · reſpondetur quod nulla legittima fuit propoſita ·

Ad aliam quando dicitur quod Fecit poſſeſſorem citari certo termino ad docendum quomodo clamabat ſe tenere etc · reſpondetur per interemptionem nam omnes tenentes eccleſie citati fuerant ad alium diem certum ad oſtendendum qualiter clamabant ſe tenere de eccleſia et epiſcopo Aberdonenſi in quo comparuerunt et inter ceteros dictus Johannes et extunc erat aliis et ſibi de eorum conſenſu expreſſo aſſignatus dies peremptorius ad faciendum omne illud quod eſſent in quarto termino peremptorio de conſuetudine facturi ſicut ex literis eorum et ex inrotulatione curie clare patet et hoc erat ad audiendum voluntatem ſeu decretum curie ſuper tenementis eorundem ·
